NEW 1956 G-E FILTER-FLO WASHER GIVES YOU CLEANER, BRIGHTER CLOTHES...NO LINT FUZZ!

Amazing Filter-Flo Washing cleans and re-cleans the water as you wash

Here's proof that the new G-E Filter-Flo Washer washes clothes without leaving lint fuzz! After 11 washings in an ordinary washer, socks at left were flecked with lint. After 11 washings the G-E way, an identical pair (right) showed practically no lint.

Look for Filter-Flo Washing System—today's most talked-about improvement in automatics. Full tub of wash water is filtered five times during a wash cycle without wasting water or detergent. Above, you see lint and loose threads being removed as circulating water flows through the filter.

Slips out for easy cleaning. The filter fits on the Activator top, also holds detergent, dispensing it evenly dissolved through the wash. After clothes are placed in washer, slip the filter into place. After wash is over, slip it out to empty.

Color-styled... General Electric Filter-Flo Washers about $3.35* weekly. Choose from 5 Mix-or-Match colors: petal pink, canary yellow (shown), turquoise green, cadet blue, woodtone brown. Also white. Models with famous G-E Activator® Washing Action for every budget, from less than $200 with your old washer. Today's best buy. Also see the new G-E Dryer with Automatic Clothes Conditioning... at your G-E dealer's.

Removes lint, sand and soap scum automatically! Never again need you put up with linty wash water that leaves fuzz on clothes...or soap scum that dulls colors.

The marvelous new General Electric Filter-Flo Washer circulates and filters the water at the rate of six gallons a minute to make sure clothes wash white and bright.

As the washbasket continuously overflows, sand settles out the bottom. Soap scum floats away. Lint is trapped in the filter which lets only cleansed, sudsy water flow back into the wash-basket.

Big capacity, too. This General Electric Washer gives you over 50% more clothes capacity than many other automatics. Water Saver Control lets you save water on small loads. General Electric Co., Appliance Park, Louisville 1, Kentucky.

Frank Waterman pens candid notes on Thom McAns after critical 30-day test

Busy Chairman of the Board of Waterman Pen Company tells, uncensored, how he didn't want to try Thom McAns... was persuaded by a contribution for his favorite boys' clubs... was amazed by Thom McAns' comfort and quality.

Frank Waterman's report, in his own words:

I DON'T know how many miles the average business executive walks during an average day, but it must be a lot. When I was approached by Thom McAn I hesitated, realizing the important part comfortable shoes play in covering those miles effectively.

I am a rapid walker with a rather long stride, and so my shoes are severely flexed at each step. The kids at the boys' clubs I'm interested in say I'm hard to keep up with. (I finally agreed to the test because my Thom McAn jury-duty fee allowed me to make extra contributions to these clubs.) To be comfortable, my shoes must fit properly and adjust easily to each movement of my foot.

Am I a fitting problem?

When I went to Thom McAn, I found the salesman could fit me perfectly, without any difficulty.

Not only that, but the shoes I wore out of the store did not require the long "breaking in" period I have needed with some other makes. They felt ready to go places right away.

Thom McAn's large assortment of styles also impressed me. I know from my own business how important it is to meet the varied tastes of the public for all kinds of different colors and styles.

And just as we must supply the right pen point to suit the customer, no matter what style of pen is selected, so Thom McAn must have all the foot sizes in each shoe style of their line. They certainly do. They offer as large a variety as I recall having seen in any store.

I take stock of the Thom McAn line

As a manufacturer, I find it amazing that the price of Thom McAns can be kept so low. To me they appear to be equal in quality to shoes selling for more than twice their price.

My guess is the large sales volume obtained from their many stores has a lot to do with it. At any rate, the low price is there, and the quality of the product speaks for itself to anyone who tries Thom McAns as I did.

Frank Waterman chose from new Thom McAns like these: left-Roman Cross-Strap black calfskin shoe, $8.95; low-cut Jaguar in chestnut brown Beaver Grain, $8.95. Thom McAn prices are $7.95 to $11.95.

Even a little shrinkage can ruin a style

What good's a dress once it shrinks? Might as well chop it up—after all, laundering has already made mincement of the fit.

according to the hue of the contestant's skin or her racial ancestry. The categories as defined by the Star were: Miss Ebony (black); Miss Mahogany (cocoa brown); Miss Satinwood (coffee and milk); Miss Allspice (partly East Indian); Miss Sandalwood (pure East Indian); Miss Golden Apple (peaches and cream); Miss Jasmine (partly Chinese); Miss Pomegranate (swarthy white); Miss Lotus (pure Chinese); and Miss Appleblossom (fair white). PREACHERS OF THE GOSPEL

Sirs:

Nate Saint ("'Go Ye and Preach the Gospel,' Five Do and Die," Life, Jan. 30) was the son of Lawrence Saint, who designed some of the stained-glass windows for Washington Cathedral a generation ago. The most recent martyr already appears in a cathedral window (below). Nathaniel Saint is the lad with five barley loaves, and two small fishes in the portrayal of the feeding of the 5,000.

NATE SAINT (RIGHT) IN WINDOW

Sirs:

With a sense of real appreciation we thank you for the excellent photographic coverage and very fair account of the slaying of our dear son and his four companions in Ecuador. Our God is worthy of the best, we are comforted by His promises.

CLARA E. and R. F. ELLIOT

Portland, Ore.

Sirs:

I quote a letter written by Elisabeth H. Elliot, wife of the martyred Jim Elliot, on January 21st:

"Jim's supreme desire was to reach those untouched people for Christ. I am so thankful that God chose him to be one of His martyrs. Nothing could have been more fitting as a climax to a life of complete consecration to God. I am filled with joy at the thought of the glory which Jim knows now, before the face of Him he loved so passionately and served so faithfully."

Lucas Wilson

Denver, Colo.

Sirs:

By such means as the blood of martyred saints the seeds of the Gospel have been sown. Though tragic in itself and though little understood by the world, God's purpose is in it all.

PAUL E. TAYLOR

Philadelphia, Pa.

Sirs:

The spirit in which these families braved dangers is admirable but our own asphalt jungles, with their violence, are challenge enough for those who seek to bring the Kingdom of Christ into the hearts of men.

JAMES E. MORRISON

Little Silver, N.J.

Sirs:

I am moved to write as an Indian from one of the Arizona tribes. I am not writing in malice, but I know when the missionaries come to the reservation they all say, "Let us show you the right way to do things." Yet we have been doing it our way for years. Not the modern way, no. But why cannot they say, "Let us show you the new way or the modern way." No, they say the right way, and who is to say who is right and who is wrong. ALVERTO CURRUTH

Detroit, Mich.

Sirs:

Five martyrs from the New Tribes Mission in California gave their lives in the same way in 1943 in Bolivia. Some people believe that the Ecuador missionaries died in vain and that the natives are better off left to their own pursuits. But let Jean Dye, wife of martyred Bob Dye, tell the story:

"It took four years before we finally met the savages. They told us how the five men had walked into one of their villages, only to be clubbed shortly after. Though a few Ayorés wanted to keep them as prisoners, the rest were in terror of any civilized man.

... We do praise the Lord that He has allowed us to continue the work with these people, until today where there are many who know Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour."

HAZEL M. REYNOLDS

Glen Arm, Md.

Sirs:

The story changed my life completely, making me realize how selfish and shallow I had become. They lived the life that counted in the long run.

Doris Pierson

Dallas, Texas

Sirs:

My deep appreciation for your accurate and warmly human story of the martyrs. Three of the five men and two of the widows as well were outstanding students at Wheaton College, Illinois. I am serving as president of a memorial fund set up in memory of these promising young men, to provide for the immediate family needs caused by their death and to further their work in the field. Those who would like to share in the memorial fund should send contributions to The Five Missionary Martyrs' Fund, Box 385, Washington, D.C.

A LOOK AT THE WORLD'S WEEK

Sirs:

We noticed with great interest ("An Inaugural Exhibition of Homburged Heads," Life, Jan. 30) the picture of our well-chapeaued Mississippi Colonels. Having supplied these gentlemen with their hats, we would like to point out that they are not Homburgs. They are conventional-shape hats with hand-felted brims that may be worn "off the face" or with the brim snapped down.

HOMBURGED EDWARD AND IKE

● Reader Mayer is right. Distinctive features of the Homburg are its crown, which has a center crease and no dents, and its silk-bound upturned brim. It was created in Homburg, Germany for King Edward VII who wanted a cross between the derby and the Tyrolean hat. The original version had a taller crown and wider brim than the modified Homburg of today, as worn by President Eisenhower (above).—ED.

THE TRUMAN MEMOIRS

Sirs:

With regard to the Truman remarks ("Fooling the '48 Forecasters," Life, Jan. 30) regarding me and the 1948 campaign, I must make several things clear. First, I never had any illusions about winning the 1948 election. My one concern was to make the cause of peace an issue in that campaign. While I believed we should go all out to come to peace with Russia while she was still weak and before she had the atom bomb, I did make it clear repeatedly from the spring of 1948 onward that I felt we should fight Russia if she invaded Turkey.

Mr. Truman speaks of the "sinister aspect" of the "Wallace movement." Undoubtedly there have been "sinister aspects" to all modern parties and governments. For instance one of the most noted Communist organizers was on the payroll of government only during the Coolidge and Hoover administrations. The Depression and the rise of the Nazi and fascist movements in Europe undoubtedly opened the door to many Communists in the Roosevelt administration. Many of these men of "sinister aspect" worked in the administration of President Truman where they had a far better opportunity to be "sinister" and to affect the policy of the nation under Overhead like this cuts the cost of fun!

Weekend sportsmen can, and do, carry everything but a ski jump right along with them on top of their cars. And how "overhead" like this cuts the cost of fun—when it's aboard a dependable, economical car!

Now, if you've not been able to make the most of your leisure time, either because you've felt you couldn't afford a reliable, well-groomed car, or because the car you have requires frequent and expensive repairs, hear this:

Because of the exceptional volume of cars of all makes and models that we have taken in trade on the new '56 Chevrolet, we've got a space problem on our hands. To make room for more new car business, we've lowered our prices to speed used car sales.

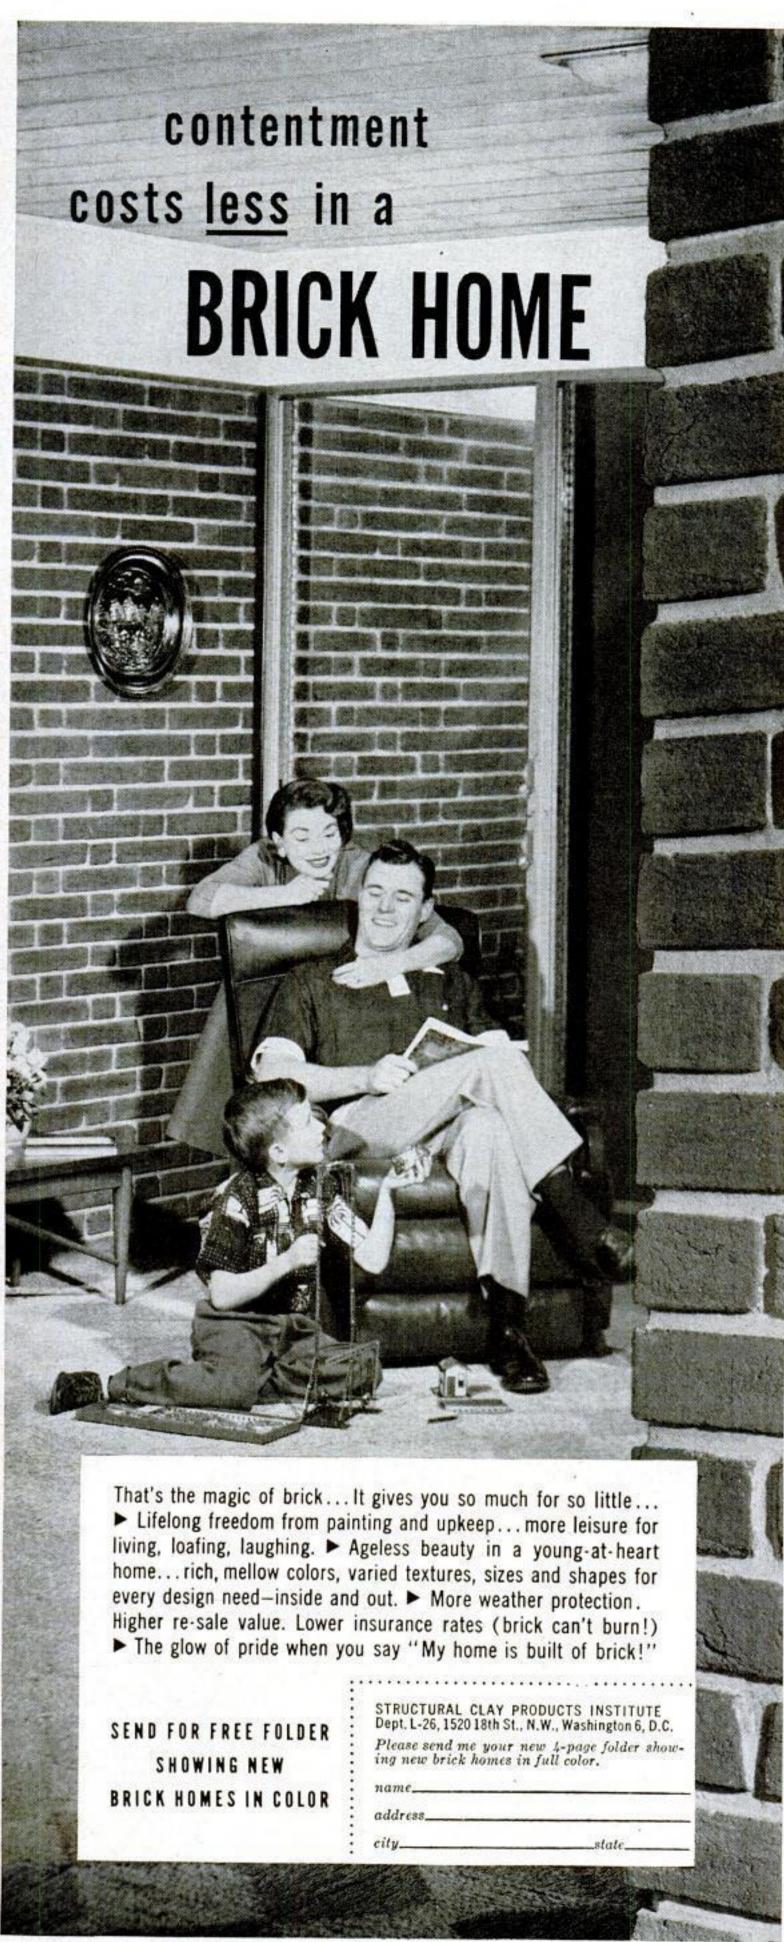

Even our famous OK Used Cars (the elite of the lot) are included among these special bargains. But, sale or no sale, they earn the OK trademark only after they have passed careful inspection and been reconditioned for performance, safety and value. That's why we're not afraid to back these cars with a warranty bearing our own signature!

cover than they ever did in the Progressive party of 1948.

HENRY WALLACE South Salem, N.Y.

Sirs:

Mr. Truman writes in his memoirs: "My nomination for the presidency by the Democratic party in 1948 was also challenged by a third movement within the ranks. This threatened to develop during the spring into a full-fledged boom for General Dwight D. Eisenhower. Among the chief agitators . . . were the late President's sons, James and Elliott, former Cabinet members James F. Byrnes and Harold Ickes, and Senator Claude Pepper of Florida."

The truth is that in 1948 I did not communicate directly or indirectly with any of the gentlemen mentioned by Truman, or with any other person advocating the nomination of Eisenhower or opposing the nomination of Truman by the Democratic convention. That spring I announced I would not attend any political convention, state or national, and I declined to comment on candidates.

You showed me ("History's Biggest Stock Issue," Life, Jan. 30) as one of the lucky ones who got Ford shares. But you got my address all balled up. You printed "Minnetonka, Minn." NIGHT VIOLENCE occurs during a student demonstration in downtown Tuscaloosa after Autherine Lucy began attending classes. A student dented top of a Negro's car, but driver got away unhurt. School said "inebriated fraternity men" led first march.

FIRST BIG TEST OF DESEGREGATION IN SCHOOLS

SOUTH WORRIES OVER MISS LUCY

Until last week the South had fought racial integration largely with speeches and the legal maneuvers of interposition (Life, Feb. 6). Then suddenly in the heart of the Deep South, where Negro population is heaviest and white supremacy sentiments run strongest, the first massed violence erupted. The scene was the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa and at the center of the trouble stood a 26-year-old library science student named Autherine Juanita Lucy. Overnight she was thrust from obscurity to dangerous fame as a symbol of the aspirations of her race and of everything the anti-integration South opposed and feared.

After a three-year legal fight, Miss Lucy had won the right to be the first Negro to enter the university. The school barred her from dormitories and dining halls but a fortnight ago she attended her first classes. Trouble came the first night, as some students, chanting "Keep Bama" white," roared through downtown Tuscaloosa. The next night another crowd stormed the campus and later harassed Negroes riding in cars (above). Last week, as Miss Lucy arrived for her third day of classes, a crowd, now including many nonstudents, was waiting. Police stood ineffectually by as rioters smashed windows of the car in which she was riding. Autherine fled to safety and the university trustees banned her from further classes "for her own safety." "This is plain old war," cried a fraternity boy. "The Negroes are asking for trouble." Other, thoughtful Southerners were worried and were far from ready to join in the clamor. The Tuscaloosa News wrote: "What has happened here is far more important than whether a Negro girl is admitted to the university. We have a breakdown of law and order and abject surrender to what is expedient rather than a courageous stand for what is right."

central figure. Authorine Lucy, wears a new robe she bought to wear in college dormitory as she studies a textbook in her brother-in-law's home in Birmingham. Banned from dormitory, she had expected to commute 58 miles from home to school.

pleading with students to go away on the third night of rioting, Mrs. Mae Carmichael, wife of the university president, explains that her husband is away at a meeting downtown. Students, some with Confederate flags, tossed stones and eggs toward her.

TROUBLED STUDENTS attend religious association meeting where Leonard Wilson (left) came to defend his leadership of mob. He said he opposes violence, favors segregation. Association rejected a motion to provide guard for Autherine if she returns to campus, but passed resolution against mob rule.

AT A TENSE MEETING OF FACULTY, PROFESSOR

A UNIVERSITY'S SOUL SEARCHED IN PUBLIC

HOSTILE OUTSIDERS-factory workers and Tuscaloosa townspeople—make up most of crowd waiting for Autherine to attend her first class. Highway patrolmen held them back when she arrived. But when she left another class, demonstrators smashed windows of the car in which she was riding. The president of the university blamed the outburst on factory workers, whereupon one union at a nearby plant demanded that he apologize and retract charge.

WILLIAM LAMPARD SAYS THAT HE DISAGREES "IN EVERY SENSE" WITH THE TRUSTEES' DECISION TO BAR AUTHERINE. LAMPARD DREW ONLY A LITTLE APPLAUSE

Once Autherine Lucy had left, an uneasy quiet settled on the campus and with it came time for searching thoughts about what had happened.

The student legislature passed a resolution which said, "Mob violence is not in keeping with either the principles or the practices of democratic procedure." Six other groups on campus passed similar statements and one student active in the demonstrations later decried the violence. On the faculty (above) voices were raised both against the violence and the trustees' decision to ban Autherine. But few on campus spoke up in favor of integration.

The harassed president of the university insisted that the violence had been fomented by some factory workers and other nonstudents. Autherine herself said, "If outsiders leave the students alone everything will work out."

ATTACKING DECISION to bar Autherine, Dennis Holt, a member of the student legislative body, says that the trustees had "run away from the fight."

EXHORTING CROWD while perched by traffic signal stanchion, Leonard Wilson says students know what to do if Autherine does not leave peacefully.

DEFENDING THE TRUSTEES, President Carmichael tells faculty he "can think of nothing worse than a student being murdered on this campus."

AN HONOR GRADUATE, Authorine led a class of six at junior high school.

AUTHERINE'S SCHOOL, junior high at Shiloh, Ala., was attended also by several of her eight brothers and sisters.

AUTHERINE'S BIRTHPLACE was four-room unpainted frame house on her father's 110-acre farm near Shiloh.

AUTHERINE'S PARENTS, both 69, warm themselves beside open hearth in the lamplit living room of the plainly furnished house where they now live alone.

A HUMBLE SETTING FOR TENSION

Recalling the angry faces of those who pressed against the car on her last day on campus, Autherine Lucy says, "I can't hate them as individuals. Maybe they would have killed me if they had gotten me out. I don't know. All I could do then was pray, and I thought, 'Am I going to die?' "

For Autherine, the trail to last week's terror began on her father's small farm in the back country of southwestern Alabama. In 1952 she graduated from Miles College, a small Negro school in Birmingham. Almost immediately, at the urging of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, she made her decision to try to enter the university to get a degree in library science.

The university first accepted her, then quickly corrected its "error," that is, it discovered she was a Negro. While the N.A.A.C.P.'s Birmingham lawyer, Arthur Shores, began the long fight to get a court order compelling the university to admit her, she taught school for two years in Mississippi and later did office work in a Negro insurance agency.

Once she was banished from the campus, Autherine took refuge in the home of her brother-in-law, Ulysses Moore III at Birmingham. There the telephone rang constantly as anonymous callers threatened her—"We're coming after you" or "We'll get you this time." But she was guarded by friends and relatives, including her young nephews, who had been taught to handle revolvers. "I'm not going to have her snatched from my care as they did the Till boy," said Ulysses Moore.

Meanwhile Shores and the N.A.A.C.P. took legal action. They filed suit to force the university to readmit her to classes and then, in a second motion designed to further force a bitter issue, asked to have her admitted to dining halls and dormitories. However legal their claim, this was a new provocation by an organization which inflames the Negroes' most bitter enemies. And it alienated some who had deplored the earlier violence.

The federal judge set Feb. 29 for the hearings. If the court so orders, said the university president, Miss Lucy would be readmitted. Meantime, a pawn between extremists of both sides, she could only sit and wait.

CO-APPLICANT, Pollie Hudson (left), sought entrance with Autherine, was rejected by university.

AFTER FIRST CLASS Autherine is escorted to a waiting automobile by Sarah Healy, dean of women, to be driven to the next class. Later the dean's car was stoned and the entire back window broken out.

A LOOK AT THE WORLD'S WEEK

BIG HATS A BIG HIT AT LOW PRICES

Heroic-sized hats, the season's biggest millinery news, were introduced at less than heroic prices. First seen in Paris, they are a big U.S. seller in the $75 range. Last week in New York, even Sears Roebuck (above) offered models—at $12.98. Their size flatters the wearer (it says here) by making her face look delicate, but their dimension threatens elevator riders.

Four senators with 90 years of service between them were investigating the junior senator from South Dakota. Republican Francis Case was sworn in (above) to tell how he was offered a $2,500 "campaign contribution" by Nebraska Lawyer John M. Neff, representing the Superior Oil Company of California. Because the contribution was made during debate on the bill to exempt natural gas producers from federal price rules (Life, Feb. 6), Case rejected it, said he had changed his mind and would vote against the bill—which still passed, 53–38. The investigation was to determine if an attempt had been made to influence Case. Questioning also tried to find out if Case had announced the offer in a late effort to defeat passage of the bill.

A QUESTION OF INFLUENCE AND THE MAJESTY OF THE SENATE

A SAFETY PIN FAILURE

A snapped strap on a svelte sheath exposed Marilyn Monroe to unexpected view. The gap opened at a press conference announcing she would make a movie with Sir Laurence Olivier.

A TUNNEL AFLOAT

With a stupendous splash, two 300-foot tubes were launched in Baltimore. They will be sunk under the Patapsco River, where they will eventually carry traffic as part of a 6,300-foot tunnel.

NIGERIA PARADES FOR QUEEN ELIZABETH

Primitive pageantry welcomes Britain's royal couple on their state visit to the empire's biggest colony

In Africa, Queen Elizabeth II of England was winding up her first visit to a colony since her round-the-world tour of 1953. Together with her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, she has been touring Nigeria, ancestral home of many U.S. Negroes and biggest colony remaining in Britain's imperial realm.

The Nigerians had welcomed her with endless parades of gentle children and a mighty durbar, an assembly of tribal chieftains, galloping horsemen and masked tribal dancers. Day after day for 20 days the salute roared on —thumping military bands, sonorous cathedral organs, blaring horns and professional praisers chanting the virtues of chiefs. It was wonderful and in the end overwhelming. At a luncheon the queen's eyes glazed and she was, all suddenly, dozing.

A split second later she was awake and back to her task—to strengthen Nigeria's ties with Britain and awaken Nigeria's own sense of unity. In London in September, Nigerian and British leaders expect to talk over plans to give Nigeria more local self-government. They will face hard problems (p. 41)—problems the queen was well aware of as she moved through the pageant-filled days recorded on these pages.

MASKED DANCERS of rural tribe wait turn. On their noses are medals commemorating the trip.

MEETING THE ARCHBISHOP, the Most Reverend J. L. C. Horstead, the queen, in silk print dress with long bodice and full skirt, comes to the cathedral in Lagos.

GREETED BY GOVERNOR-GENERAL, Sir James Robertson, at the capitol, Elizabeth is formally dressed in white duchess satin and a "Russian fringe" tiara.

THE QUEEN'S CARRIAGE for traveling about Lagos in full view of the crowds in the street was the gleaming Rolls-Royce in which (above) she leaves the is meeting the Oba (chief) of Lagos, Adeniji-Adele II, traditional head of the town. The Oba stands under an elephant-topped umbrella, symbol of his office.

CONTEMPLATIVE MOMENT came at review when band played God Save the Queen. For this occasion her tropical travel wardrobe yielded a taffeta print.

THE MINISTER OF LABOR, the Honorable Chief Festus Okotie-Eboh, and his wife make a grand entrance at a government reception. His costume, starting with the feather-topped boater and ending in a 20-foot train that winds up around the neck of a small boy, is a mixture of Nigerian modern and traditional.

QUEEN'S ROUTE (lines on map) covered 1,880 miles by air, 120 miles by train, 108 miles by auto.

MODERNITY TOUCHES THE BACKWARD LAND

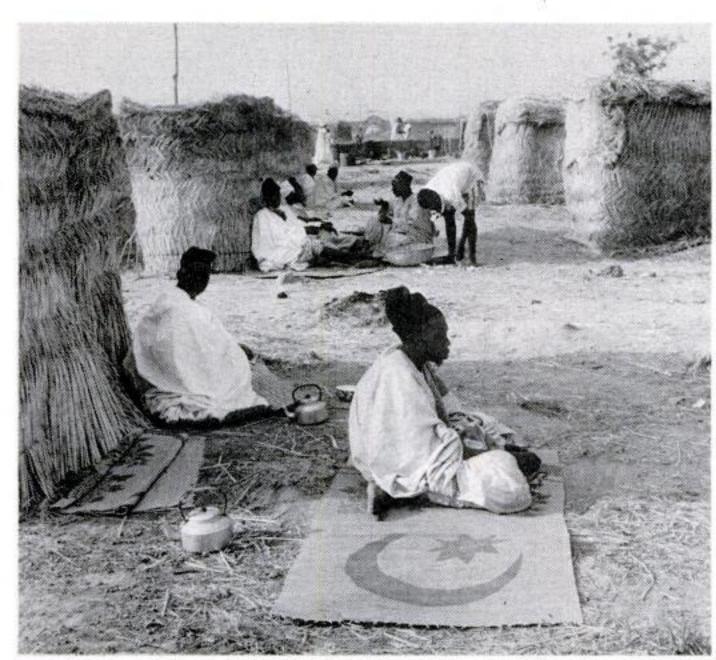

Nigeria is nearly as big as Texas and New Mexico put together and its 31.5 million people are nearly four times the population of those states. It is the largest all-Negro country in the world—there are less than 16,000 whites. Most people live in tiny hovels but some of them somehow manage to buy bicycles and wives costing $224 each when uneducated, more than twice that when they can read. Modernity has begun to reach them in many ways (right and right below), and right now a favorite tune is Elizabeth R, Eight to the Bar.

Actually there are three Nigerias: the Moslem north, backward but growing rich by growing peanuts; the Christian-pagan west, Yoruba tribe country, luxuriating in its cocoa profits; and the Christian-pagan east, Ibo tribe land, where people are ingenious in the ways of trade and thereby mistrusted. Within itself, therefore, Nigeria contains the same bitter seeds of division that split India and Pakistan. The queen gently preached tolerance to them, tolerance "not only in religious matters but also towards those whose views and traditions differ."

IN MODERN CAPITOL of northern provinces the queen stands with her husband. The building is named for Lord Lugard who opened area to British penetration and united regions into a single colony.

THE OLD WAYS in Nigeria are seen in the hand-washing pots, prayer rugs and primitive hutments in the camp of tribesmen who have come to see their queen.

THE NEW WAYS in Nigeria are seen by the queen in Lagos orthopedic hospital where doctor explains the swimming pool therapy for polio and spastic cases.

BOUNCING GIRLS in kilts and brassieres leap off the ground when dancing before the queen. The girls, who come from Owerri Province, kept uttering hoarse yelps which were answered by short, explosive roars from the spectators, who, excited by the dance, swayed back and forth to the rhythm of the performers.

WARRIOR TRIBESMEN at the Kaduna durbar, starting 200 yards out across a polo field, charge at full gallop in waves directly at the queen, brandishing their swords and staffs as they come. In swirling dust they pulled their horses up short only a few feet from the platform on which the queen and her party sat watching.

DANCING TRIBESMEN from Miango area, dressed in leather-thonged loincloths, gyrate in rows of eight through a set pattern of steps while queen and duke watch from royal Rolls-Royce. Drums and tiny seeds rattling in the grass pods tied in rows around the performers' legs provide the beat for their dancing.

THE FEUD AND ITS GHOST

RATS, CATS AND SENATORS

Members of the U.S. Senate are traditionally adept at talking out of both sides of their mouths, but seldom has there been as brazen a two-faced ploy as that perpetrated last week by the Senate Agriculture Committee.

On the one hand it approved the President's proposal to create a "soil bank" to take land out of production, and thus cut down on the huge surpluses depressing farm income. It even voted $175 million more than he asked—a total of $1.35 billion.

But then the committee did something else. It voted to restore high, rigid price supports, which would defeat the whole idea of the soil bank. As Secretary of Agriculture Benson said, "The soil bank would empty our warehouses but 90% of parity would fill them again. . . . The Congress must decide which way it wants to go; we cannot go both directions at once."

We can't imagine people as shrewd as American farmers being taken in by the perpetual-motion economics the Senate farm lobby is thus proposing. If any are, we urge them to consider a business which promises much greater rewards than farming for far shorter hours. We are thinking of the Cat & Rat Ranch business. It was advertised by some wits in Lacon, Ill. back in 1875 and its dead-pan prospectus was—as Clifton Fadiman's new American Treasury reports—solemnly carried by every newspaper in the U.S.:

starting a cat ranch in Lacon with 100,000 cats. Each cat will average 12 kittens a year. The cat skins will sell for 30¢ each. One hundred men can skin 5,000 cats a day. We figure a daily profit of over $10,000. Now what shall we feed the cats? We will start a rat ranch next door with one million rats. The rats will breed 12 times faster than the cats. So we will have four rats to feed each day to each cat. Now what shall we feed the rats? We will feed the rats the carcasses of the cats after they have been skinned. Now Get This! We feed the rats to the cats and the cats to the rats and get the skins for nothing.

The bitter recriminations between Truman and MacArthur (Life, Feb. 13), make good reading, but their value for the average citizen will be lost if he thinks he can just sit back and enjoy a good fight. Nor is it his duty to take sides. The question is, could such a feud between two powerful U.S. leaders, enlarged by a similar split within the nation, happen again? What clues does it yield for the guidance of our Asian policy today?

Set aside the constitutional issue (which did not exist), the personalities (terrific) and the politics (both subtle and intense). What you have left in the MacArthur firing, the real source of the tragedy, is this. Although MacArthur was trying to make one in Korea, and Truman was trying to find one in the echo-chambers of the U.N., the U.S. did not in fact have any Asian policy at that time. Asia was not taken as seriously as Europe. The Korean war fitted into no larger American strategic goal or plan. Our resistance to Asian Communism was therefore spasmodic, opportunistic and doomed to fail.

Since then, there has been an improvement. Unlike Secretary Acheson, who never went there, Secretary Dulles is about to make his fourth visit to Asia and gives it a high place in his strategy. SEATO has been formed, the seed at least of an eastern NATO. Our alliance with Chiang Kai-shek, which Acheson was about to scuttle before the Korean war, is firmer and better based. We have helped Ngo Dinh Diem bring South Vietnam to the threshold of true national independence. And so on. But does all this add up to the Asian policy whose lack was so conspicuous in 1950?

Some clues to the answer, to what a complete Asian policy must be, can be found in the Korean tragedy. When the Reds were deciding whether to cross the 38th Parallel in June 1950, what did they see opposing them? Some 500 U.S. military advisers left behind after our evacuation of South Korea, four green divisions in Japan, and a South Korean army which was not allowed to have tanks or to mass on its own frontier. No wonder Stalin took his gamble. A complete Asian policy will not again leave any frontier so ill-defended as was Korea in 1950.

The U.S. is far better armed today, and so are its Asian allies; but not well-armed enough, either physically or psychologically. SEATO is just getting around to its first border-defense exercises this month, with not all its members participating. During the Dienbienphu crisis, U.S. diplomatic influence was nearly emptied by Washington's refusal to contemplate the use of U.S. ground troops to support the defenders of South Vietnam. Would we again refuse this hurdle if a crisis arose to which ground troops were an essential part of the answer? If so, we are still not serious enough about Asia.

Dulles has got all the diplomatic mileage possible out of our atomic preparedness. This must of course be maintained and reinforced by equal progress in other all-out weapons, notably guided missiles; such are the blue chips, unhappily, of cold-war diplomacy. That is why defense is so expensive these days. It cannot fall behind in any weapon which the Communists could ever use to blackmail us. But in the Korean war their weapon was the simple foot soldier and the coolie with the A-frame, who all but offset our air superiority. Although another Mac-Arthur would presumably not have to hobble his air force behind a Yalu boundary, he will also need ground troops—and a national willingness to use them.

Atomic preparedness, "old-fashioned" preparedness, and the willingness to resist given all that and our Asian policy is still not complete. We have to know what kind of goals and future for the people of Asia we are willing to share.

In his famous farewell speech before Congress, MacArthur said of Asia:

"Mustering half of the earth's population and 60% of its natural resources, these people are rapidly consolidating a new force, both moral and material, with which to raise the living standard and erect adaptations of the design of modern progress to their own distinct cultural environments This is the direction of Asian progress and it may not be stopped. . . . In this situation it becomes vital that our own country orient its policies in consonance with this basic evolutionary condition . . . the colonial era is now past and the Asian peoples covet the right to shape their own free destiny. What they seek now is friendly guidance, understanding and support . . . the dignity of equality . . . a little more food in their stomachs, a little better clothing on their backs, a little firmer roof over their heads and the realization of the normal nationalist urge for political freedom."

If MacArthur, a military man, can understand these nonmilitary realities of Asia, all the more so should the State Department. For these Asian aspirations, which Asian Communism is now frustrating, can in time frustrate Asian Communism if they are staunchly supported and intelligently encouraged by the U.S. A whole Asian policy must include a large role for the encouragement of these political and economic goals of the Asian people. This is the peaceful superstructure of a whole Asian policy, and it can no more be neglected than its military underpinnings. But like its military underpinnings, it still leaves much to be desired.

What made the MacArthur-Truman feud so tragic was that the nation was divided on the same issue that separated them. That division is no longer so bitter. But neither has it been superseded by a full Asian policy to which the nation can subscribe.

IT IS RUBBER AND IT FLIES

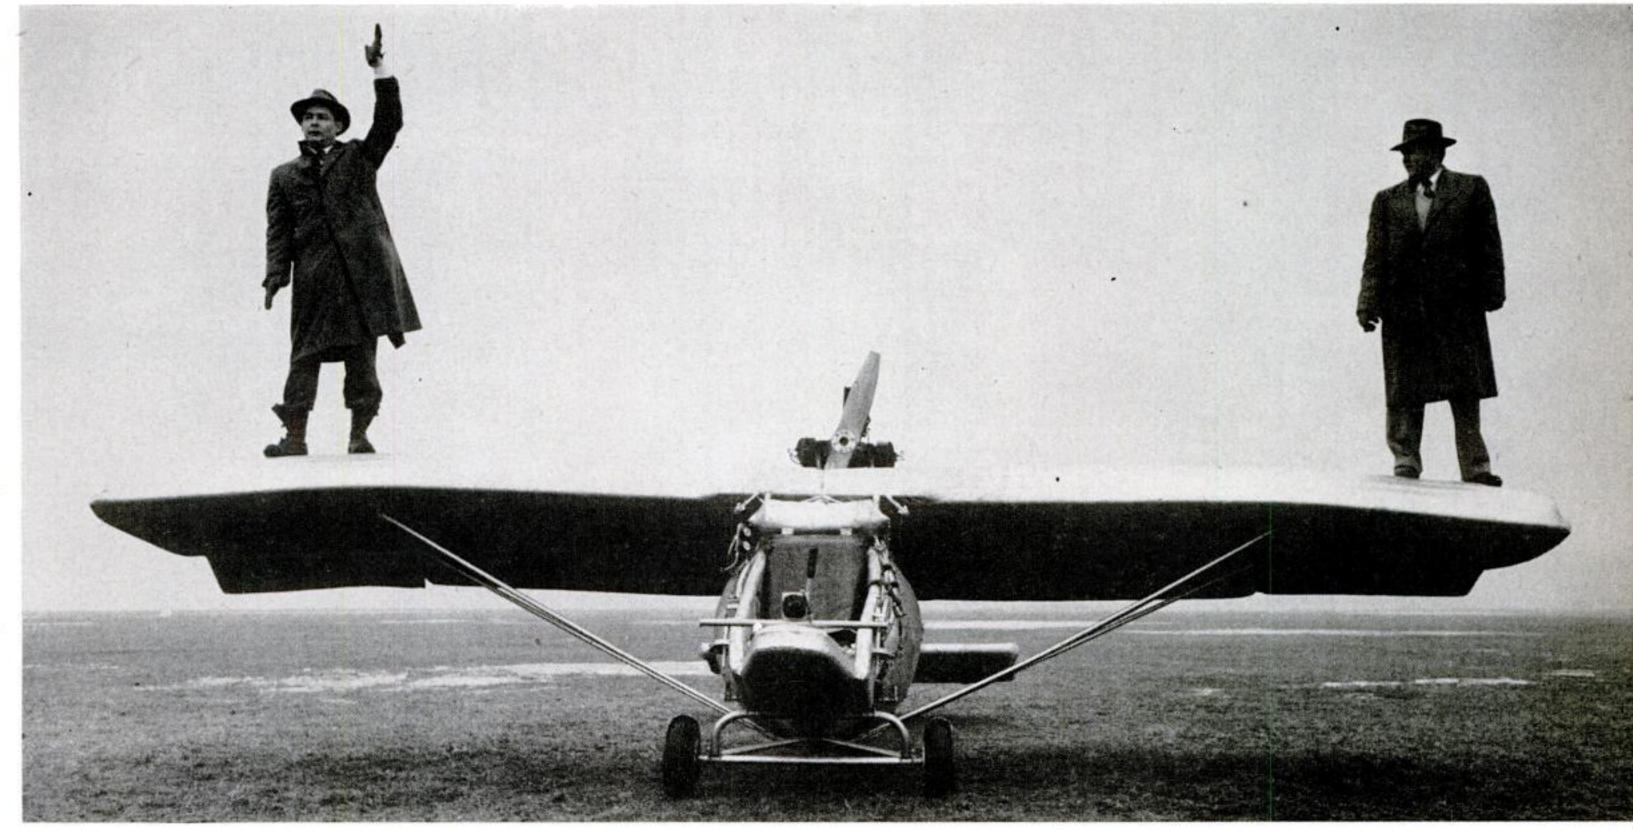

Happy as a group of boys playing with a new toy, Goodyear officials last week unrolled a pile of the rubber sheeting they use to make air mattresses, filled it with air. It took the shape of an airplane wing. Another piece blew up to form a fuselage. Putting them together with a 40-hp engine, the men flew the contraption 60 feet into the air.

Though Goodyear was interested only in testing the rubber fabric and plans no immediate production of its little plane, the compact flying mattress would be just the thing to parachute in to a stranded pilot, along with cylinders of compressed air to inflate the craft, and a bicycle pump if the cylinders failed.

READY FOR ASSEMBLY, plane is surveyed by its inventors. Fuselage is simple hollow balloon. Wing (rear) consists of sealed sheets of rubberized fabric held together by threads. Struts are of aluminum.

TAKING OFF with Pilot Dick Ulm, plane needs only 200-yard runway, reaches a 60-mph air speed.

DEFLATED after flight, plane is rolled up on its — own landing gear, trundled off like a wheelbarrow.

A ROW AND ITS CAUSE

The U.S. Air Force's big weather balloons, which lift a gondola full of meteorological instruments five to 10 miles into the air, were inflated last week into an international controversy. The Soviets demanded the U.S. stop releasing them. They exhibited balloons that had allegedly landed on their soil and claimed they were used for aerial photo reconnaissance. The U.S. agreed to suspend launchings from sites like those in West Germany, where these pictures were taken, from which the balloons might be blown over the U.S.S.R. But a day before Moscow's demand, a balloon with Russian markings had fallen on Japan.

READY TO GO, the balloon rig rests on launching truck. Gondola containing instruments parachutes when bag fails to clear aviation lanes or flight ends.

Now Dynaflow goes airplanes one better

(The take-off's terrific even before you switch the pitch!)

Know what that headline means? Simply this:

At take-off, the pilot of a modern airplane sets the pitch of his propeller blades for all-out acceleration. Aloft, he switches to cruising pitch for better gas mileage.

You get the same choice in a '56 Buick with Variable Pitch Dynaflow.

Just floor the pedal and you switch the Dynaflow blades to high-performance angle. That gets you going instantly at full-power take-off.

*New Advanced Variable Pitch Dynaflow is the only Dynaflow Buick builds today. It is standard on Roadmaster, Super and Century—optional at modest extra cost on the Special. Then, just ease up on the gas pedal, and you smoothly switch to cruising pitch—and a lot better gas mileage.

But now you get an extra bonus even airplane pilots don't get.

Now you get a nimble new getaway response even without switching the pitch. Now, at only part throttle, you get a solid new takehold for all your normal driving. And you get it with another boost in gas mileage.

So you can take it as absolute fact that there's no other transmission in the world today like Buick's Variable Pitch Dynaflow —smooth to the infinite, simplicity itself to operate, and thrilling beyond anything else to be had in an earth-bound vehicle.

And that's just the beginning.

For with it goes the record-high power and record-high compression of big new 322cubic-inch V8 engines.

With it goes a superb new handling—and the great new Buick ride that literally has a "sense of direction"—and the stunning new sweep-ahead styling that graces Buick for '56.

Surely, you owe it to yourself to see, sit in and sample the most electrifying Buick yet and the best buy yet, by far. Drop in this week, won't you?

EVEN BEFORE BEING CUT AND POLISHED THE 426-CARAT UNNAMED DIAMOND BLAZES ITS BLUE LIGHT LIKE A MINIATURE ICEBERG IN THE MIDNIGHT SUN

426 CARATS OF ICY BLUE

Jewel firm wonders what to do with huge diamond it has bought

Last month New York jewel dealer Harry Winston (Life, March 17, 1952), was ushered into the sedate offices of the Diamond Trading Co. Ltd. in London and given a small bag like a Bull Durham sack. Out of it popped the incredible glitter above—a 426-carat diamond, the world's ninth biggest diamond of gem quality, found in South Africa in June 1954.

Winston concluded the biggest diamond sale ever made between one dealer and the De Beers syndicate. He paid $8.4 million for the great unnamed stone, along with a handful of 50- to 200-carat gems and about 50,000 small diamonds. In the incongruously offhand way in which great jewel fortunes are transported today, they traveled safely by mail and subway to Winston's New York office. But Harry Winston's problems had just started (next page).

THE UNNAMED STONE, shown with coins to give scale, is 21/8 inches long, 11/2 thick at deepest.

Now, at a real saving, you can give every member of your family the famous tooth brush that can do most to protect their teeth. It's the Nylon-bristled PRO Tufted Tooth Brush for deeper cleaning and firm yet safer gum massage . . . or the PRO "59," if you prefer a softer brush. PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC BRUSH CO.

Florence, Massachusetts

LAST STAGE OF JOURNEY for the stone, from U.S. appraiser to Winston's office, was made by subway. The unarmed, unguarded courier carried it in a grocery bag. The stone was covered in transit by $1.2 million insurance.

HEART OF GLITTERING PROBLEM IS CURRENT SHORTAGE OF KINGS

IKE other big stones, the one fifth of a pound of superbly crystallized carbon shown on the preceding page stands a very fair chance of becoming a part of world history. But unlike the Koh-i-noor (which may have weighed 800 carats in the rough, is 108 after two cuttings, and now is part of the British crown jewels), or the Hope (possibly 112 carats originally, ultimately cut to 44, and now owned by Winston) or the Orlov (some 300 carats in rough, 199 when cut, and now a part of Soviet Russia's diamond treasury), this new addition to the world's great jewels may have trouble finding a suitable home. That is because both its greatest value and beauty will be realized only if it is cut into one large stone; ideally it would be an emerald-cut diamond of about 200 carats, perfectly suited for the centerpiece of a necklace. Its value would then be around $2.5 million and Winston, who has made his own fortune by dealing in big stones with people who also own fortunes, has made a list of those who he thinks are in a position today to buy The Unnamed.

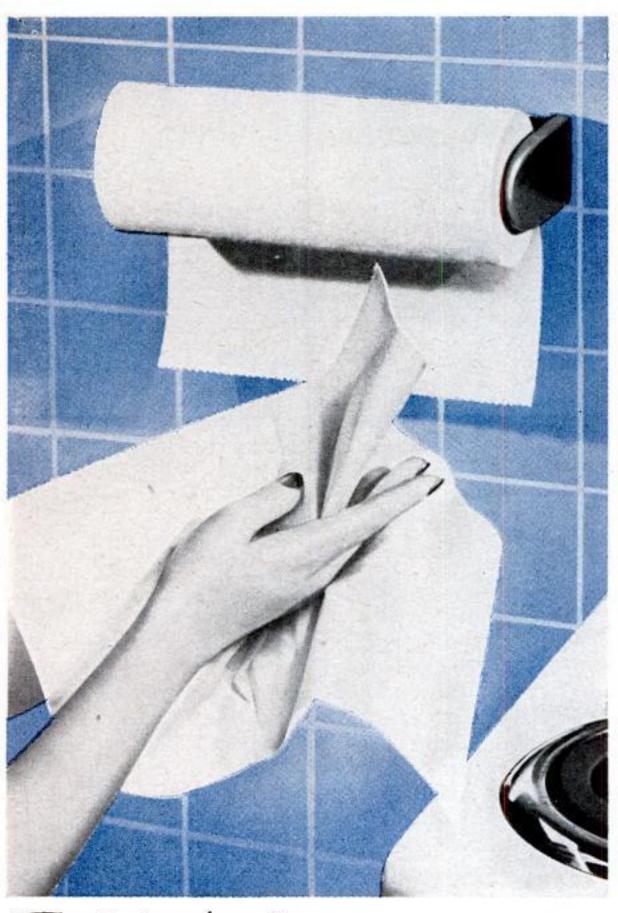

The list has only a dozen names on it and none of them are U.S. citizens, for Winston feels the U.S. tax structure discourages such luxurious investments. In the days of royalty he would have been besieged by emissaries of kings and princes eager to blow part of their own tax collections on so rare a jewel. Today the King Farouks and the Indian princes are more or less retired from active business. Besides, the number of state functions at which such a stone can tastefully be worn are close to the vanishing point.

As he pondered this ice-blue dilemma last week Winston believed his best chance of selling the stone in one piece was to some Middle East oil tycoon. If he cannot find such a purchaser, he will be forced, out of sheer economic necessity, to cut it up into smaller stones, probably five or six, which would bring an estimated $1.75 million.

That would break his heart and not merely because of the profit involved. From the "three Cs" criteria of the expert—caratage, color and cleanliness (lack of blemishes)—The Unnamed is flawless. The head of De Beers Consolidated Mines, Sir Ernest Oppenheimer, has called it "the most magnificent stone ever discovered in South Africa."

Barring its sudden sale to an unexpected customer, the stone is almost certain to stay as is for at least a year. During that time Winston's chief cutter, Bernard de Haan, and rough stone expert, Daniel Frey, will study the diamond's grain and crystallization for dozens of hours. From 50 to 100 casts will be made of it, in glass, lead and plastic, to facilitate study, experiment and measurement. De Haan will lightly grind off four spots on the stone to open up "windows" that will enable the experts to see clearly into its very heart and double-check on the direction of the grain.

make the decision as to whether the stone shall become an emerald cut or a pear shape and he will also have the right to name the stone, after himself or his family, as he likes. Then after at least six months of practice cuttings and grindings of models, the actual grinding and cleaving will begin. It may prove possible by cleaving, which splits a diamond as a chisel does a block of pine, to save a 20-carat piece of the original 426 carats and thus salvage an additional $100,000 stone. But cleaving can, by one misdirected blow, shatter a diamond into a hundred relatively valueless fragments. Winston says that unless he can be sure of a safe cleaving, he will have the extra amounts ground off, even though grinding converts $100,000 of the stone into worthless diamond dust. To finish it as one big stone will take a year, and merely to saw it into five rough pieces, if that is what eventually occurs to the diamond, will take 10 months. Even if it is purchased tomorrow, The Unnamed is not likely to be ready to wear before some time in 1957.

But sooner or later, if it stays in one piece, it will get a name and a home and launch on a centuries-long hegira of adventure. Perhaps, like the 125-carat Jonker and some other large stones he has sold, it may even return to Winston. In 1951 he sold the huge Star of the East to King Farouk for $1 million and sent a quarter-million-dollar emerald along on approval. Before Farouk could pay for the emerald, the revolution of 1952 occurred and he had to leave Alexandria in something of a hurry. In the confusion the Star of the East disappeared. But even as he was leaving Alexandria, Farouk spotted U.S. Ambassador Jefferson Caffery, walked up to him in a palace hall and, under cover of shaking his hand, slipped him the emerald. "Get this back to Harry Winston in New York," whispered the king and took off. Caffery did. Winston is confident the Star of the East will ultimately reappear, although perhaps not in his lifetime.

possible cuts, all tentative at present, are shown in three photographs of the stone, marked for each cut. Emerald cut (top left) is shown with an emerald-cut diamond 1/7 its size, pear shaped (bottom left) with one 1/4 its size. Picture at right shows how diamond might be cut into six pieces. Finished diamonds surrounding it show types of stone each piece would make. More pepper is consumed in the world than any other spice. Pepper, both black and white, is ground from the berry of the pepper vine. It grows in India, Indonesia, the Malay Archipelago and Siam. For black pepper the berries are picked while green, are dried and cured. (The white pepper is left on the vine to ripen.) The curing is done by spreading the berries on mats in the sun or suspending over slow-burning fires until they turn dark brown or black.

Pepper adds a spicy tang peculiarly its own to many many foods. To get the most of its delightfully pungent full-bodied flavor and aroma it should be fresh.

Miller (left) and Raymond Bayer (center), students at St. John's College, have just asked W. G. Torpey of Naval Research Lab if the offices are air-conditioned.

COMPETITORS in the search for scientists hung signs along hotel's halls.

WHITE TICKETS were posted to call the job candidates for their interviews.

BIG FLESH MARKET FOR PHYSICISTS

"This certainly is turning into the biggest flesh market in the world," said a weary personnel director. He was talking about the mad scramble to hire some of the 4,000 scientists attending a meeting arranged by the American Institute of Physics at New York's New Yorker Hotel. With the nationwide shortage of scientists approaching the critical stage, the talent-finding agents of nearly 300 companies and government organizations descended upon the staid convocation and took over two whole floors of the hotel for their interviews.

For the physicists it was a sellers' market. Instead of trying to impress prospective employers, they sat back and listened to the competing personnel men dangle such lures as salaries up to $15,000, membership in company-owned country clubs, jobs for their wives and up to 25% of their time free to work on personal research projects.

No amount of enticement could possibly fill all of the waiting positions. Only 275 of the physicists were officially interested in jobs. About as many more, already happily employed, shopped around to see what they were worth to other companies. The army of talent scouts worked desperately on even the most remote prospects, for, in their pockets, they had urgent orders to find 2,000 skilled physicists.

H. L. MENCKEN: HIS LAST GIBES AND BRICKBATS

Recently found 'Notebooks' show he was a witty cynic to the end

Few men left a more indelible imprint upon the minds of an entire generation than H. L. Mencken, the scoffing, irreverent cynic who died a fortnight ago at 75. Reporter, columnist, political commentator, lexicographer, editor of the American Mercury and the Baltimore Sun, Mencken delighted in being a public scold. At the peak of his influence in the 1920s and early '30s, he was happiest when stripping the skin off some public fraud or windbag, or deliberately affronting the sentiments of the Great American Public he liked to call boobus Americanus.

Over the years Mencken wrote notes to himself on thoughts he planned to expand into essays. In 1948, despairing of ever catching up with them, he put them all together in an envelope to be published as his notes. He forget about them after a cerebral hemorrhage ended all further writing. Shortly before his death they were found and will be published on May 21, as Minority Report: H. L. Mencken's Notebooks, by Alfred A. Knopf ($4). From the book Life has taken these Mencken samples which show the iconoclasm of the Baltimore sage at its most acid and outrageous.

AN ECCENTRIC SAGE, Mencken enjoyed his backyard woodpile, made from cut-up boxes, old tables, herring kegs and odds and ends. As a far-fetched joke, he sometimes painted the woodpile.

The human race

The average man never really thinks from end to end of his life. The mental activity of such people is only a mouthing of clichés. What they mistake for thought is simply repetition of what they have heard. My guess is that well over 80% of the human race goes through life without ever having a single original thought. Whenever a new one appears the average man shows signs of dismay and resentment.

The notion that anything useful is accomplished by providing a large amount of leisure for the inferior man is probably full of folly. He invariably spends it foolishly. The five-day week is humane but it would be silly to say it has produced any public value, save the lowly value of making idiots happy. They are just as stupid as they were before they had it; indeed, there is some reason to believe they are more stupid.

Equality before the law is probably forever unattainable. It is a noble ideal, but it can never be realized, for what men value in this world is not rights but privileges.

The existence of most human beings is of absolutely no significance to history or to human progress. They live and die as anonymously and as nearly uselessly as so many bullfrogs or houseflies. They are, at best, undifferentiated slaves upon an endless assembly line, and at worst they are robots who leave their mark upon time only by occasionally falling into the machinery, and so incommoding their betters.

The capacity of human beings to bore one another seems to be vastly greater than that of any other animals. Some of their most esteemed inventions have no other apparent purpose, for example, the dinner party of more than two, the epic poem, and the science of metaphysics.

Human beings never welcome the news that something they have long cherished is untrue: they almost always reply to that news by reviling its promulgator. Nevertheless, a minority of bold and energetic men keep plugging away, and as a result of their hard labors and resultant infamy the sum of human knowledge gradually increases. Even the stupidest man of today rejects as absurd ideas that were entertained seriously by Socrates, and even the most pious nun hardly believes some of the non-sense preached by high ecclesiastical dignitaries in the 13th Century.

Man is one of the toughest of animated creatures. Only the anthrax bacillus can stand so unfavorable an environment for so long a time. All other mammals would succumb quickly to what man endures almost without damage. Consider, for example, the life of a soldier in the front line—or the life of anyone in Mississippi.

My guess is that if [Negroes and Jews] were suddenly admitted to the hotels that now bar them, the first comers would quickly support the exclusion of the rest.

The social worker, judging her by her own pretensions, helps to preserve multitudes of persons who would perish if left to themselves. Thus her work is clearly dysgenic and antisocial. For every victim of sheer misfortune that she restores to self-sustaining and social usefulness, she must keep alive scores of misfits and incompetents who can never, for all her help, pull their weight in the boat. Such persons can do nothing more valuable than dying.

Women, love and marriage

The female moron, in her capacity as parasite, is frequently able to conceal her low intelligence, for the world is very apt to judge women by their clothes. The female moron . . . employs every device that is calculated to arrest the attention of unobservant men, and in consequence she often marries well. Not uncommonly her imbecility is revealed dramatically when her first husband dies, for with money in her purse she usually tracks down a second who would disgrace a ten-cent-store girl. Many such well-heeled but hollow-headed widows marry movie actors.

Government and politics

A strong government always wars on the superior man. Its regimenting of the inferior goes on too, but is harmless; they can't be made worse.

Only a country that is rich and safe can afford to be a democracy, for democracy is the most expensive and nefarious kind of government ever heard of on earth.

Government is actually the worst failure of civilized man. There has never been a really good one, and even those that are most tolerable are arbitrary, cruel, grasping and unintelligent. Indeed, it would not be far wrong to describe the best as the common enemy of all decent citizens.

It would be humane to shoot all Presidents on the expiration of their terms, as I long ago proposed that every unsuccessful candidate for the Presidency be hanged. They dodder along in a truly obscene manner, and always end as public nuisances. Al Smith was the perfect example.

War

If the abolition of war were really possible it would be a pity to lose an enterprise that has given so much delight to mankind. It remains the greatest of sports, and I am convinced that the overwhelming majority of those who are forced to engage in it enjoy it, and look back on it afterward with high satisfaction. The average soldier left behind him only what the average American had had in peacetime, to wit, a wearisome and badly rewarded job, with small prospect of anything better thereafter. In place of this dull drudgery he found in the Army a vastly more spacious life, with many of the privileges of a chartered libertine.

In every community in America, however small, there are local notables whose notability rests wholly on the fact that they were once drafted into some war or other. Their services were probably trivial and they took up service reluctantly, but nevertheless they are now men of mark, and insist on having a voice in all communal affairs. Their general intelligence is shown by the kind of ideas they advocate. They are, in the main, bitter enemies of the liberty of the individual, and are responsible for some of the worst corruptions of politics. The most grasping of all politicians is the war veteran.

One of the amusing by-products of war is its pricking of the fundamental democratic delusion. For years Homo boobus stalks the earth vaingloriously, flapping his wings over his God-given rights, his inalienable freedom, his sublime equality to his masters. Then of a sudden he is thrust into a training camp, and discovers that he is a slave, after all—that even his life is not his own.

The English

The English look upon all things American with contempt and dislike. There are Englishmen, of course, who pretend to friendliness for the United States, but it always turns out on brief investigation that they are trying to sell something.

I hope no one will mistake my occasional animadversions on the English for moral indignation. They are, in their international relations, scoundrels, but so are all other nations. If they differ from the rest it is only in the superior impudence and shamelessness of their false pretenses, the immeasurably greater virulence of their hypocrisy. This, it seems to me, is a kind of superiority.

Religion

We must respect the other fellow's religion, but only in the sense and to the extent that we respect his theory that his wife is beautiful and his children smart.

Of all learned men, the clergy show the lowest development of professional ethics. Any pastor is free to cadge customers from the divines of rival sects, and to denounce the divines themselves as theological quacks. Doings that would cause a lawyer to be disbarred, a medical man to lose his license to practise, and even a chiropractor, a bartender or a whore-madam to be regarded as grossly unethical, are part of his daily routine. . . .

The scientist who yields anything to theology, however slight, is yielding to ignorance and false pretenses, and as certainly as if he granted that a horse-hair put into a bottle of water will turn into a snake.

There is no possibility whatsoever of reconciling science and theology, at least in Christendom. Either Jesus arose from the dead or He didn't. If He did, then Christianity becomes plausible; if He did not, then it is sheer nonsense. I defy any genuine scientist to say that he believes in the Resurrection, or indeed in any other cardinal dogma of the Christian system.

The only really respectable Protestants are the Fundamentalists. Unfortunately, they are also palpable idiots, and so Christianity gains nothing by their adherence—in fact, it is gravely injured by their adherence, just as spiritualism would be made preposterous, even if it were not so intrinsically, by the frowsy old imbeciles who believe in it.

Why assume so glibly that God who presumably created the universe is still running it? It is certainly perfectly conceivable that He may have finished it and then turned it over to lesser gods to operate. In the same way many human institutions are turned over to grossly inferior men. This is true of most universities, and of all great newspapers.

ARRESTED by Boston's Watch & Ward Society in 1926 for selling banned copy of American Mercury, Mencken (center) is surrounded by spectators and reporters before being led off to jail. Ban had been imposed because the magazine contained a short story, Hatrack, about life of a small-town prostitute.

Crime and punishment

In trials for murder or assault, it should be competent for the defense to introduce testimony showing the character of the victim. I am willing to admit evidence to show that the victim, though perhaps not a criminal himself, was of such small social value that his death or injury was no appreciable public loss.

Capital punishment has failed in America simply because it has never been tried. If all criminals of a plainly incurable sort were put to death tomorrow there would be enormously less crime in the next generation.

Another old punishment that might be profitably revived is that of banishment. Canada would hardly notice a few additional ruffians, and Mexico might even welcome them.

Ruminations

One of the fellows I can't understand is the man with violent likes and dislikes in his drams . . . who holds that Scotch whiskey benefits his kidneys whereas rye whiskey corrodes his liver. As for me, I am prepared to admit some merit in every alcoholic beverage ever devised by the incomparable brain of man, and drink them all when the occasions are suitable—wine with meat, the hard liquors when my so-called soul languishes, beer to let me down gently of an evening. In other words, I am omnibibulous, or, more simply, ombibulous.

The fact that I have no remedy for all the sorrows of the world is no reason for my accepting yours. It simply supports the strong probability that yours is a fake.

I always distrust and dislike a man who has changed his basic notions. When a reader writes in to say that some writing of mine has shown him the light and cured him of former errors I feel disgust for him, and never have anything to do with him if I can help it. I dislike, more or less, all Calvinists, Communists and other such enemies of reason, but I dislike ex-Calvinists and ex-Communists very much more.

Of all the classes of men I dislike most are those who make their living by talking—actors, clergymen, politicians, pedagogues, and so on.

To me the scientific point of view is completely satisfying, and it has been so as long as I can remember. It leaves a good many dark spots in the universe, to be sure, but not a hundredth time as many as theology. It also fails on occasion to console, but so does theology; indeed, I am convinced that man, in the last analysis, is intrinsically inconsolable.

As I grow older I am unpleasantly impressed by the fact that giving each human being but one life is a bad scheme. He should have two at the lowest—one for observing and studying the world, and the other for formulating and setting down his conclusions about it.

Intellectuals, philosophers, teachers

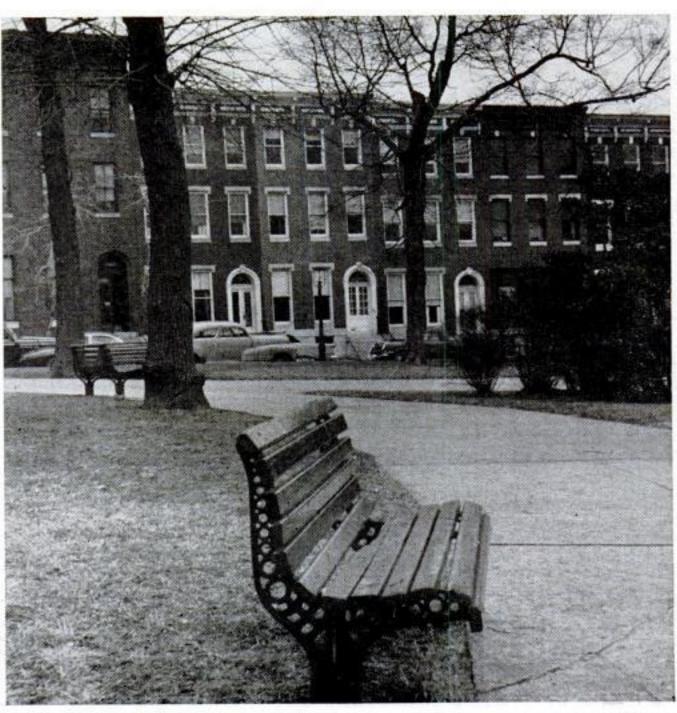

The United States has not only failed to produce a genuine aristocracy; it has also failed to produce an indigenous intelligentsia. The so-called intellectuals of the country are simply weather-vanes blown constantly by foreign winds, usually but not always English.

Philosophy consists very largely of one philosopher arguing that all others are jackasses. He usually proves it, and I should add that he also usually proves that he is one himself.

The public schools of the United States were damaged very seriously when they were taken over by the State. So long as they were privately operated the persons in charge of them retained a certain amount of professional autonomy, and with it went a considerable dignity. But now they are all petty jobholders, and show the psychology that goes with the trade. Even savages have reached a better solution of the educational problem. Their boys are taught, not by puerile eunuchs, but by their best men, and the process of education among them really educates. This is certainly not true of ours.

Doctors

The current sentimentalizing of the old-time family doctor is, like any other sentimentality, mainly buncombe. All the errors that lead to burst appendixes are made by family doctors. The patient is usually sick enough to call for help, but by the time he gets to the specialist he is too far gone for it. Such errors are always made by family doctors who are supposed to know the patient inside and out. While they gossip with him, with occasional glances at his tongue, and inquire about his mother-in-law's asthma, his burst appendix is pouring pathogenic organisms into his abdominal cavity.

THE DARK HISTORY

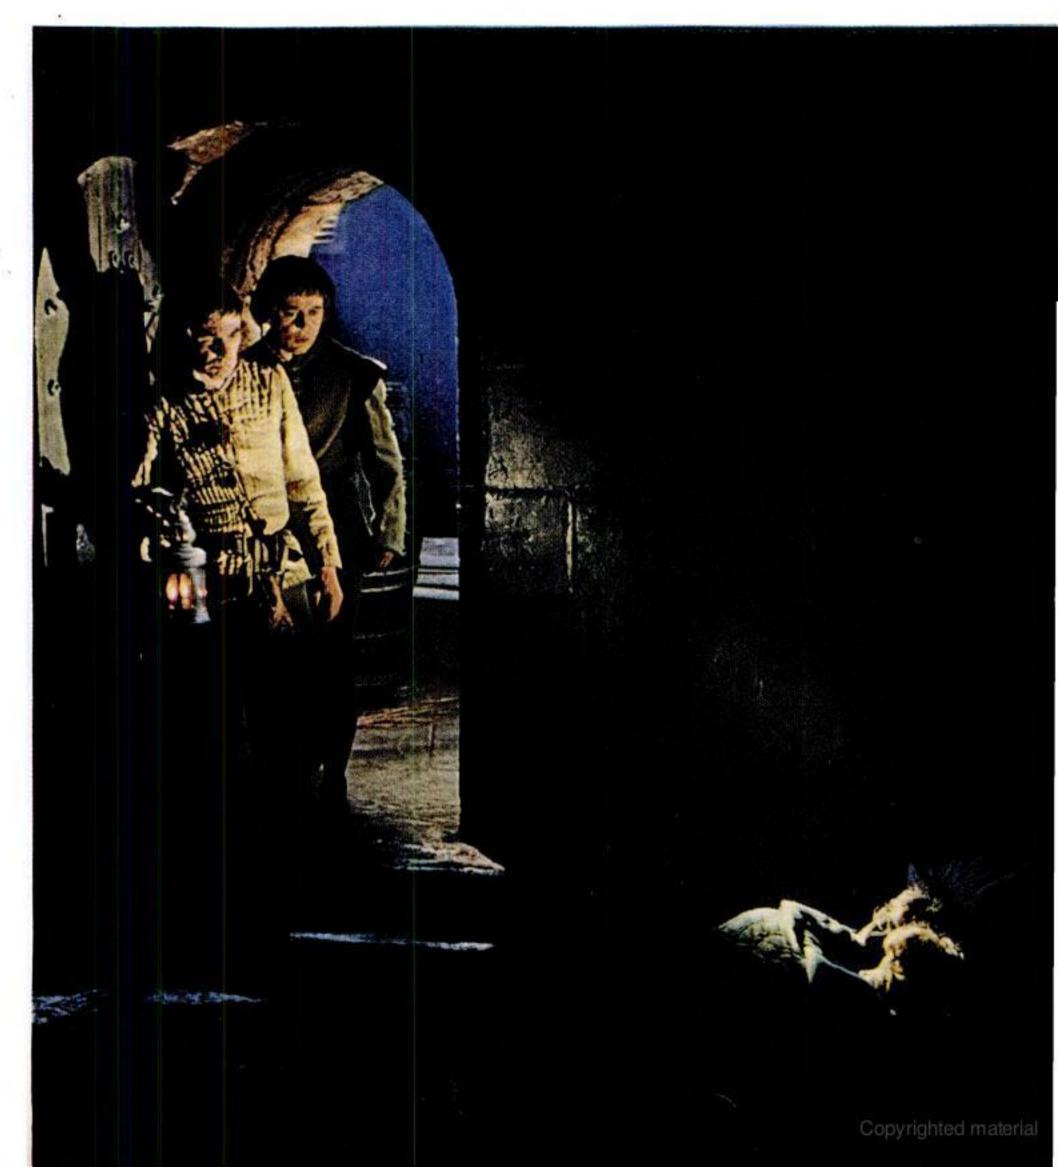

PALACE PLOTTERS, the Duke of Buckingham (Sir Ralph Richardson, left) and Richard go over their plan to have young Edward (in background), now automatically king on his father's death, declared illegitimate so that Richard himself can be declared king. Unknown to Buckingham, Richard also plans to have the helpless young Edward and his brother, the Duke of York, assassinated in Tower of London where, as their official protector, he arranges to have them sent.

UNHAPPY CLARENCE (John Gielgud), Richard's elder brother whose arrest he caused by rumors, has premonition of death. Richard's assassins later drown him in cask of wine.

IN THE TOWER two murderers enter bedchamber where princes lay, "Girdling one another/Within their alabaster innocent arms." On Richard's orders they smother the boys.

FALLEN IN BATTLE on Bosworth Field where he has gone in haste to meet his rival, Henry Tudor, Earl of Richmond, who has come back from France with an army to dethrone him, King Richard cries, "I think there be six Richmonds in the field: five have I slain today instead of him. A horse! A horse! my kingdom for a horse!" In the heat of battle he fails to get one and is ignominiously slain, not by Richmond but by foot soldiers of one of his own treacherous courtiers.

OF A WICKED KING

Olivier and a brilliant film cast bring new life to Shakespeare's 'Richard III'

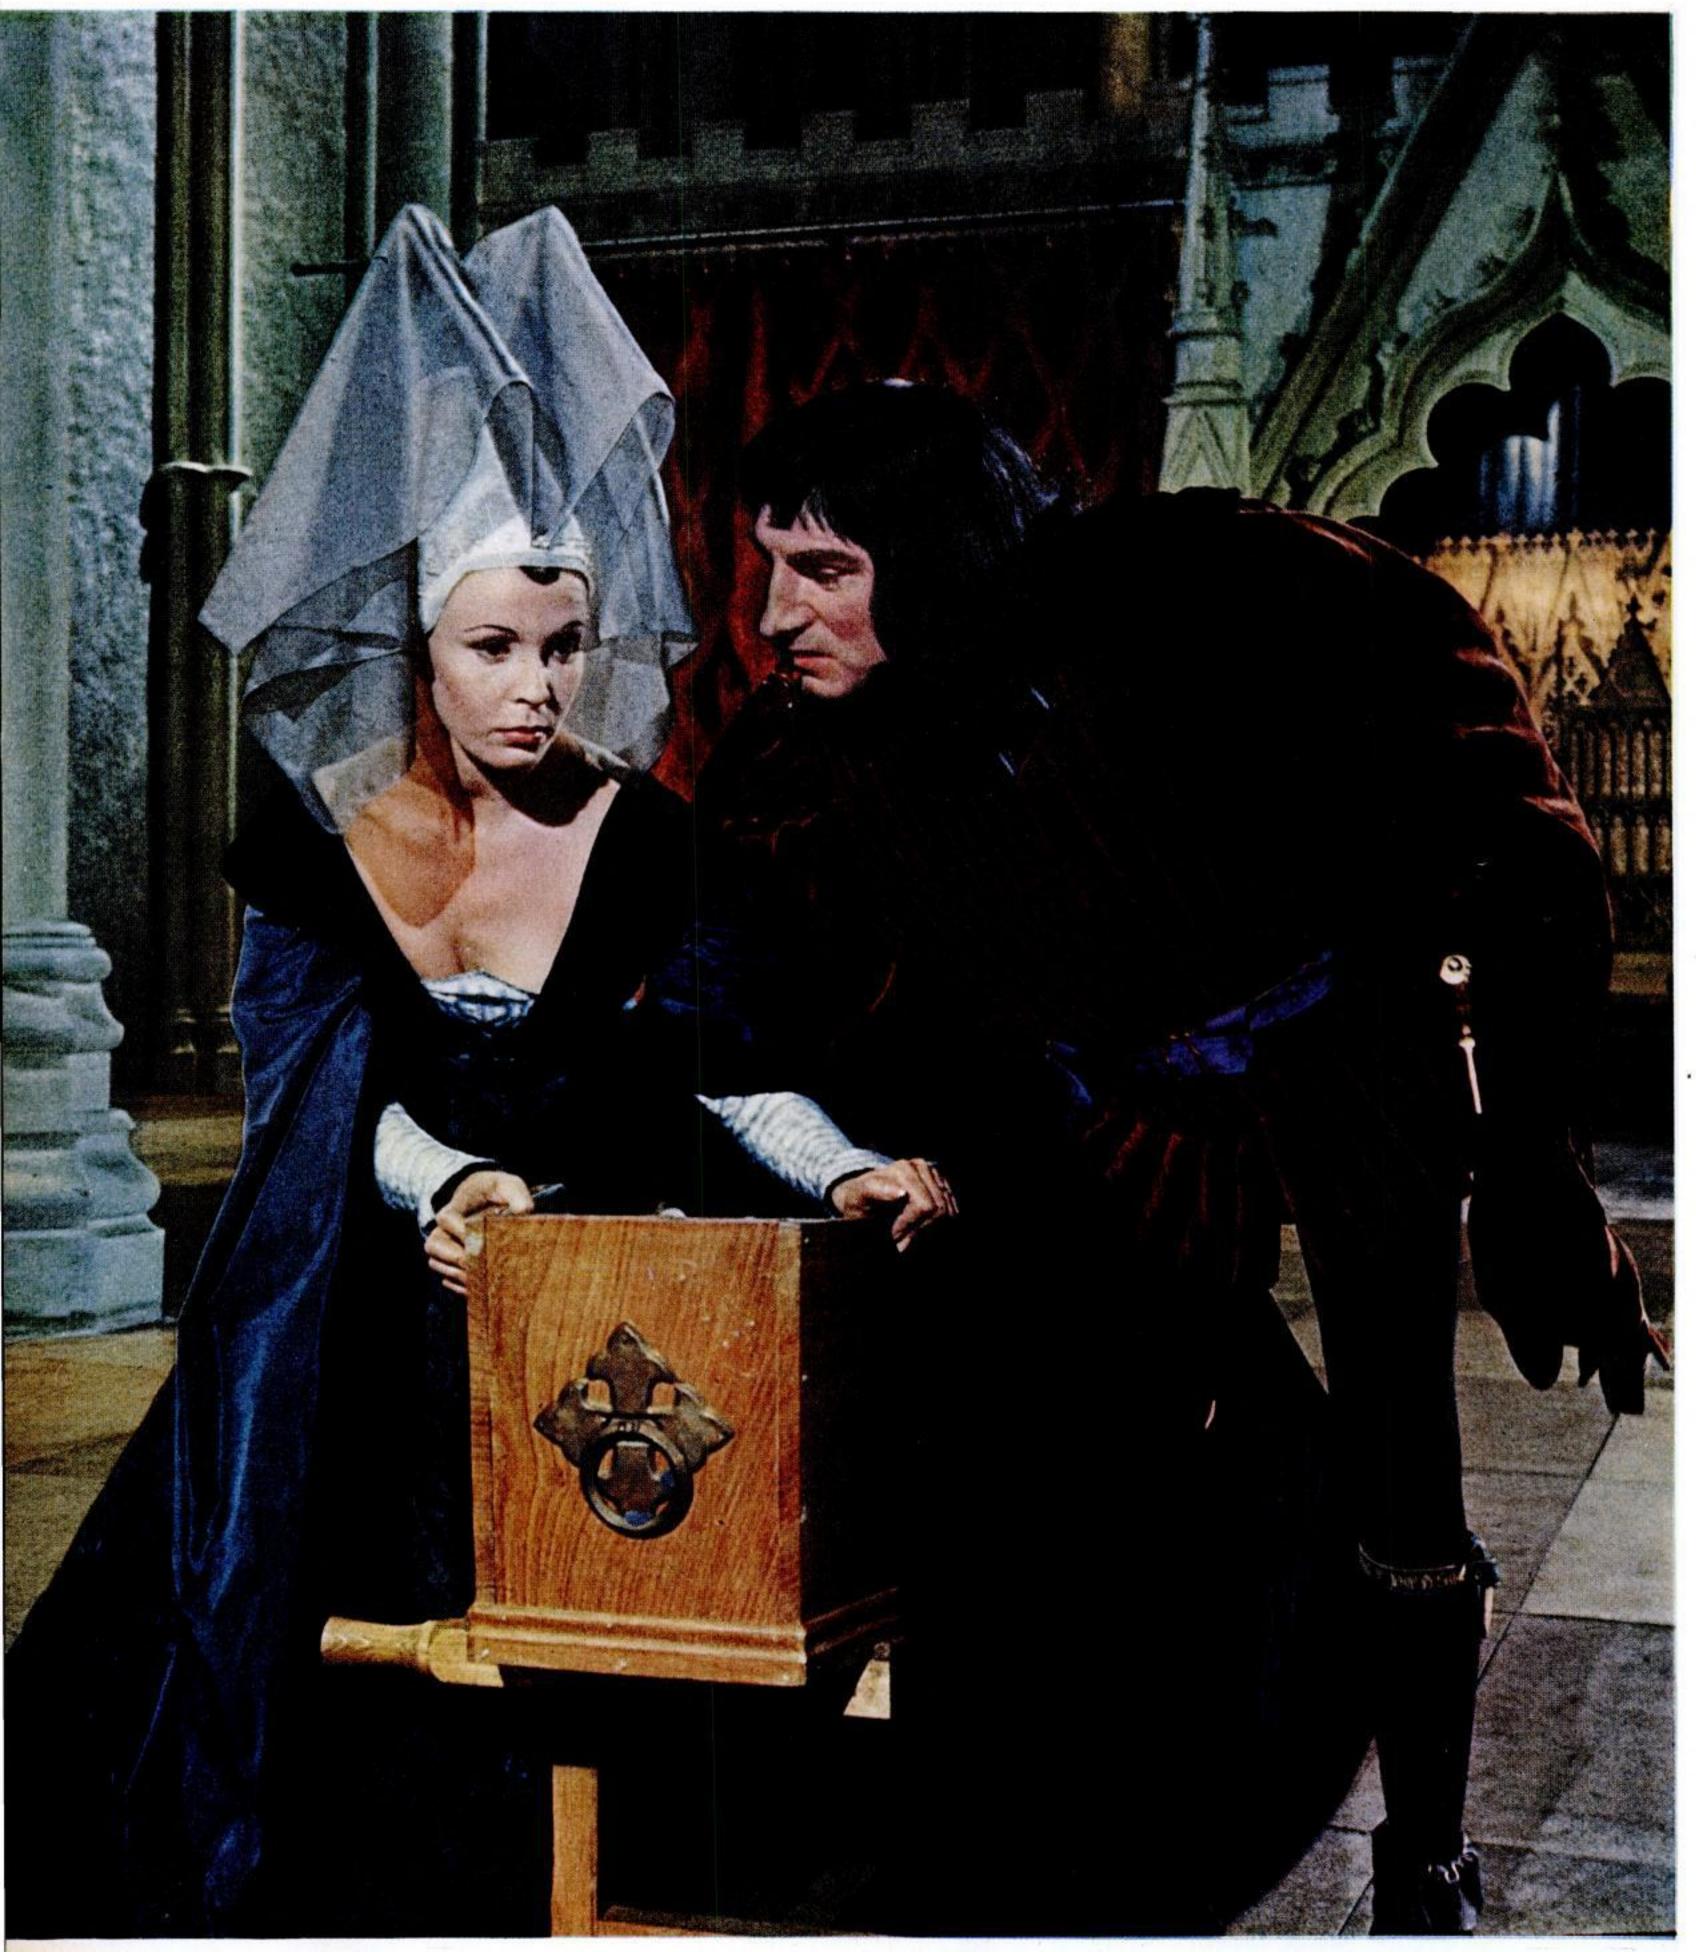

King Richard III, as Shakespeare portrayed him, was one of England's least attractive monarchs—malevolent, murderous, deformed in body and warped in spirit. But since the play was written, Richard has proved irresistibly attractive to almost all Shakespearean actors, who yearn to play the juicy part. The greatest living Shakespearean player, Sir Laurence Olivier, is no exception. His brilliant new movie version of the play will be seen first in the U.S. on television. NBC bought it for $500,000 and will soon broadcast it in its three-hour entirety.

Not one of Shakespeare's better plays, Richard III has been felicitously streamlined for action, magnificently filmed and cast with four famous stage knights—Sir Laurence himself, Sir John Gielgud, Sir Ralph Richardson and Sir Cedric Hardwicke. Historians have lately been defending the real Richard, saying he was a good and unjustly defamed monarch. But Producer-Director Olivier lets no such second thoughts inhibit him as he skillfully portrays Shakespeare's fascinating, wicked hunchback.

RICHARD'S CORONATION, by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Nicholas Hannen), is the culmination of a bloody series of crimes and plots to remove those who stood between him, as Duke of Gloucester, and the throne of England.

A CYNICAL CONSPIRATOR, Richard turns his back as brother is crowned Edward IV. This scene, which opens film, was not in original play. It was added by Olivier who took the additional lines from Shakespeare's Henry VI, Part 3.

OVER THE COFFIN of the young husband Richard has just slain, Lady Anne (Claire Bloom) hears in amazement Richard's crafty proposals of marriage. To her horrified cries of "Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity!" Richard admits the killing: "But 'twas thy beauty that provoked me." Lady Anne unaccountably capitulates and later marries him. Olivier makes Richard's deeds still fouler by placing Anne's husband in coffin, rather than her father-in-law, as in play.

CONSTANT COUGHING

caused by a sore or tickling throat. Coldene helps quiet nerves which produce coughing. And because it eases swallowing and reduces the tickling sensation, it helps bring relief. At stage 3,

MOST POWERFUL COLD MEDICINE YOU CAN BUY WITHOUT A DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION

The common cold is not a simple ailment. It is a disorder which attacks various parts of your system, bringing a variety of miseries to different parts of your body as it spreads.

Coldene is unlike any cold-and-cough medicine ever offered over druggists' counters. For it doesn't rely on the limited powers of one or two ingredients, but unites the powers of several potent drugs . . . all in proper balance.

The pictures above show the five stages of the common cold, and also how the many effective ingredients in Coldene attack the miseries of your cold-whatever its stage.

Coldene is a prescription-type medicine. It contains a powerful analgesic and nerve relaxer. And these, together with Ephedrine (a decongestant), plus Ammonium chloride (an expectorant), and Methapyrilene fumarate (an antihistamine), tell you why Coldene is so potent. Most powerful cold medicine you can buy without a doctor's prescription.

Again Coldene is different! Unlike hardcoated antihistamine tablets which may take a long time to absorb, Coldene is a liquid and goes to work fast. Nor do you wait for it to reach your stomach and be digested. For some ingredients in Coldene go to work the moment they touch your throat's membranes. And Coldene's liquid form distributes its relief-giving powers faster throughout the body.

AT OLD VIC IN 1952 CLAIRE BLOOM SCORED GREATEST SHAKESPEAREAN SUCCESS AS JULIET TO ALAN BADEL'S ROMEO

CLAIRE'S CLASSIC CAREER

AS OPHELIA when she was only 17, Claire played in a modern-dress performance of Hamlet with Paul Schofield.

As Richard III's hapless Lady Anne, wistful Claire Bloom (see cover) adds another to the roles which have made her, at 25, one of the most accomplished Shakespearean actresses alive with a repertory running from the big roles like Juliet to the lesser ones like Perdita in The Winter's Tale. Miss Bloom started as a Shakespearean when she was 5. Having seen Norma Shearer play Juliet in a movie theater in Wales, she went home and began to learn the lines. She was 21 and a member of the Old Vic company in London when she finally played the role (above). Critics then hailed her as "the most enchanting Juliet in memory," and her performance almost singlehandedly put the tottering Old Vic on its financial feet.

By that time Miss Bloom had become a movie star in Charlie Chaplin's Limelight and had played Ophelia in a modern-dress Hamlet in Shakespeare repertoire at Stratford-on-Avon. Her success was certainly the result of a deep, natural talent. But it was still more the outcome of Miss Bloom's intense, single-minded ambition—plus that of her devoted mother, a would-be actress who was determined her daughter "would not be second-rate." Most frequently typed as the sweet, tragic innocent, Miss Bloom has lately begun to reach out to different roles and emotional ranges. On March 5 over NBC she will play the fiery, willful young queen of Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra.

PFC. OSCAR THE AIRBORNE MOUSE

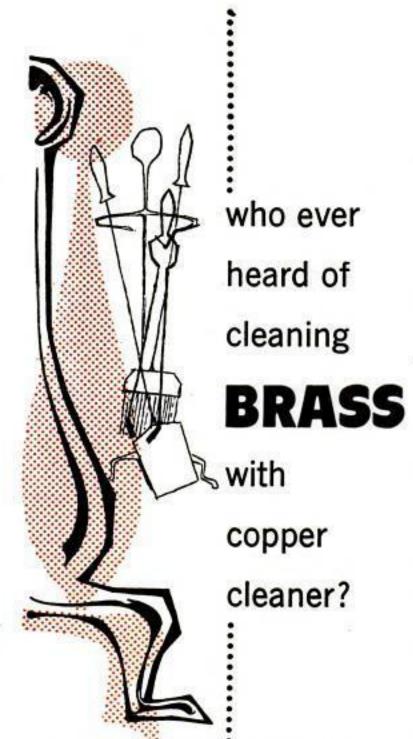

U.S. soldier's German pet makes parachute hops with his master

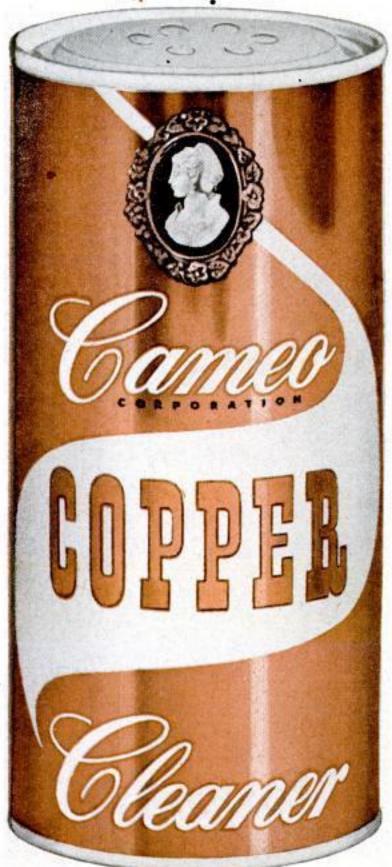

In the beginning Oscar seemed just an ordinary 80-pfennig (18¢) house mouse. That was what Sgt. Ralph W. Burton of the U.S. Army's 10th Special Forces Group and San Diego, Calif. paid for him in a pet shop in Bad Tölz, Bavaria, where the sergeant is stationed. But Oscar quickly demonstrated that among mice he was a man. When Sergeant Burton, a parachutist, makes his practice jumps, Pfc. Oscar, Special Forces Airborne, makes them with him. So far the rash rodent has made at least 15 jumps from a tower and one from an airplane.

Actually Oscar jumps twice on every descent. He leaves the tower or airplane riding inside Sergeant Burton's collar. Once Burton's chute is open, Oscar is launched in his own little pink silk parachute and mouse and man ride down in companionable good fellowship. The sergeant is usually on the ground first. He quickly releases himself from his chute and is all set to snag the Pfc. as soon as he drifts within reach.

LANDING TECHNIQUE requires Sergeant Burton, after doffing his own chute, to catch Oscar.

Cameo cleans more than just copper. With a minimum of rubbing, you can use it to clean brass andirons and a host of other won't-come-clean things. Cameo is downright ruthless with dirt. Removes stubborn stains from glass, plastic, porcelain — brings metals to a sparkling luster. It's the copper cleaner that doubles in brass . . . and many other materials.

OSCAR'S RIGGING is thoroughly checked before jump by Sgt. Fred Coleman, the chute rigger. Harness is a rubber band snapped around Oscar's middle.

AUTOMOBILE EXCURSIONS also please the mouse. On days when Burton is not jumping Oscar likes to ride in the sergeant's car to nearby Bad Tölz.

CINNAMON CUISINE is acceptable to Oscar provided the bun is sufficiently stale. His favorite food, however, is a doughnut heavily coated with sugar.

Epic Of Man-Part III

In booming industrial Canada, alive today with progress and change, it is an astonishing experience to come upon a group of people who live almost as primitively now as men did more than 10,000 years ago. Next week in Life you will see such people, the Caribou Eskimos of Central Canada. Though their home is only a few hours' flight from modern, bustling Winnipeg, these Eskimos follow a way of life that approximates that of Mesolithic Man, who flourished in Europe 100 centuries ago.

The Caribou Eskimos sustain themselves by hunting, fishing and fowling. Their traditional weapon is the spear; they still use rude implements of antler and bone. They have no agriculture, no domestic animals save the dog. And that's about the way it was with Mesolithic Man.

The amazing cultural kinship between these Eskimos and prehistoric man is made clear and understandable in next week's issue as the editors present the third instalment in Life's series, "The Epic of Man."

In nine pages of imaginative paintings you will get an authentic reconstruction of life among men of the ancient Mesolithic culture which added so much to man's technology. And in Fritz Goro's brilliant photographs of the everyday life among the Caribou Eskimos you will get a documentary portrait of a curious people who have remained virtually untouched by thousands of years of progress and culture.

When this series was launched last November, Donna Douglas of Washington's WTOP-TV told her viewers, "'The Epic of Man' in LIFE this week is the most interesting story I've read in a long time and one of the most beautifully illustrated." Similar spontaneous comment was made on more than 170 television programs, some of which you have heard. If you haven't had a chance to see for yourself what the cheering has been about, be sure to read "The Epic of Man" in next week's LIFE.

Grave Damage to Dresden Art

MASTERPIECES BACK FROM RUSSIA SHOW RAVAGES OF A 10-YEAR EXILE

Ever since 1945, when the great Dresden art collection was carried away to Russia, the whereabouts and state of the celebrated paintings have been a mystery and a worry to the art world. A few weeks ago the mystery was cleared up by a showing in East Berlin of the most famous of the 1,900 works which the Russians had finally returned to Germany. But the worry remained, for the exhibition revealed that some of the treasures had suffered serious damage during their Russian sojourn.

This troubling discovery was made by an American, Dr. Alfred Frankfurter, editor of Art News, who was among the first to inspect the paintings. He found some 30 masterpieces cracked, blistered or badly repainted. Intimately familiar with the paintings from prewar studies, Frankfurter attributed their damage to climatic changes. During the war the art had been hidden by the Germans in mines, cellars, even water pipes. The shift from the moist atmosphere of these hiding places to the dry climate of Russia had caused the paint to split, swell and flake. These revelations were promptly denied by the East Germans, but the photographs on these pages, made in East Berlin, provide their own evidence.

CRACKED CORREGGIO shows split running through figures of Virgin and Child. If this separation is not closed, more paint will chip off edges of crack.

The Road

Or what paved the way for sixty-one million cars?

When you drive anywhere in America today it isn't an adventure.

You no longer jolt down unmarked and uncharted roads in uncertain cars. Roads that are bottomless mudholes or rock-ribbed ruts.

But your father did. For a mere forty years ago there were hardly 4,000 miles of paved roads in this country, and not quite 2,500,000 automobiles to go anywhere on them.

What changed the picture so quickly to 300,000 miles of smooth highways and over 61,000,000 vehicles? For one thing, the simple need for American business to make a profit.

Example: the automobile manufacturers. Trying to sell more cars and make a profit, they made constantly better cars. The better the cars became, the more people bought them. The more people bought cars, the greater the need for safe roads. And we built them.

Example: the oil companies. We had to make a profit, too. So after we refined the gasoline we scraped the bottom of the barrel of crude oil and made asphalt. At first it was a primitive blacktop that was poured right on the road. But to sell it in competition with costlier materials, we kept improving it.

Result: today heavy-duty asphalt covers eight out of every ten miles of American roads. Today, too, our expanding economy calls for a third more miles of new and wider highways. Your taxes will pay for these new roads, so we hope they're built of asphalt. It does everything any costlier material does. It can save you as much as $78,848 per mile. It's proved itself in paving the way for sixty-one million cars.

ON GIORGIONE'S "VENUS," THE RUSSIANS TRIED TO CHECK PAINT-FLAKING IN THE AREA OUTLINED IN WHITE

SLEEPING VENUS GETS SPLOTCHY TORSO

Fifty years ago the Russians were leaders in the field of art restoration but gradually they lost touch with the technical advances of the West. In caring for the Dresden treasures, they revealed some of their old skill in their expert cleaning of about three dozen paintings. But in more ticklish jobs of restoration the Russians were apparently neither confident nor competent. When faced with the deterioration of the famous Sleeping Venus by Giorgione they tried to counter the most serious part of the damage but did not attempt to cure it. Now the East Germans, lacking modern equipment, are left with the problem.

RUSSIAN REPAINT is seen as whitish spots on body of Venus. Since thorough restoration would involve laying of blisters and removal of 17th Century repaint, Russians simply indicated paint losses and halted flaking on torso.

THE INDIAN PATH WASHINGTON TOOK THROUGH THE PENNSYLVANIA WILDERNESS STILL SHOWS HERE AS AN ERODED GULLY WINDING THROUGH THE TREES

Washington's Trek to Fame

HIS GREATNESS BEGAN WITH A 1753 JOURNEY

"I was employed," wrote George Washington in 1754 to his brother, "to go on a journey in the winter (when I believe few or none would have undertaken it) and what did I get by it? My expenses borne!"

With this complaint Washington dismissed one of the most fateful of all American journeys—a journey which was to lead to the Seven Years' War, the first world war of modern times, and was eventually to lead the young Virginian to the high places of history.

In 1753 Washington made his winter journey from Virginia to a French outpost near Lake Erie. He was 21, a major in the Virginia militia with no experience as a soldier but with a great hunger for honor and recognition. The French at the time were moving into the Ohio Valley, and the governor of Virginia wanted to warn them to withdraw. Washington volunteered as messenger. He set out on October 31, returned in mid-January, shortly before his 22nd birthday.

Two centuries have greatly altered the country Washington passed through—the Forks of the Ohio which he noted as a fine site for a fort are now downtown Pittsburgh. But many places he saw are little changed. On these pages Life follows Washington's journey, showing the look of the land much as he saw it.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

GOVERNOR'S STUDY where Washington probably was given letter to the French was in the "palace." Building burned in 1781, was restored in 1930s.

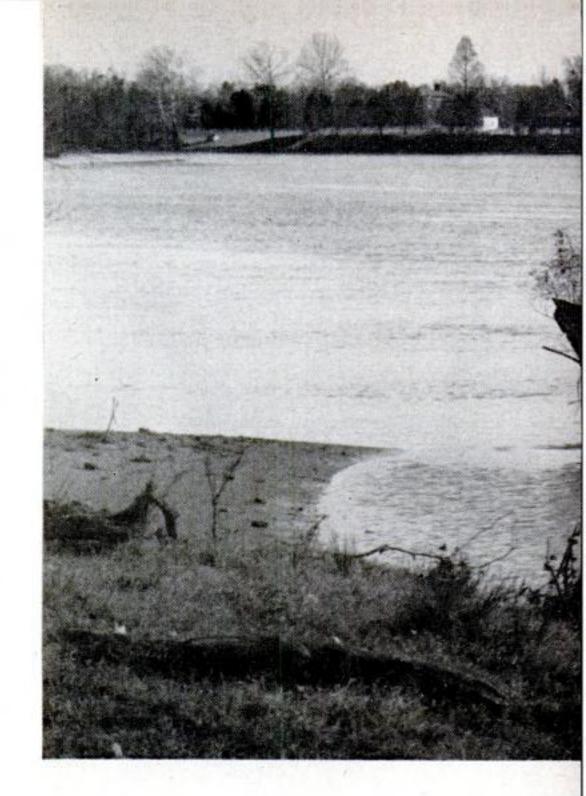

THE "PALACE" had a new look when Washington saw it since it had recently been renovated. It remained governor's residence until Revolution.

WASHINGTON'S ROUTE was nearly the same going and returning except between Murthering Town and Allegheny which he walked on way back.

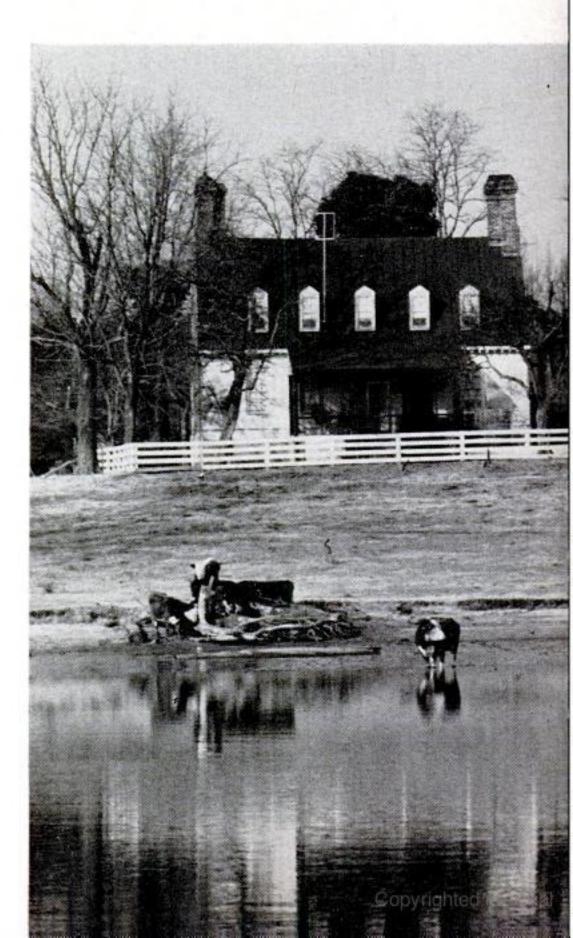

CLAIBORNE'S FERRY landed near this house (right). The ferry was used until 1925 when bridge was built across the Pamunkey near West Point, Va.

A familiar way

Washington's journey begins in Williamsburg, Va. where he went to get the letter to the French from Governor Robert Dinwiddie. A staunch defender of his king's and his own interests, Dinwiddie lived in what the colonists called the "palace" (left, above), because of the extra levies they were forced to pay to build it. From Williamsburg, Washington set out north and west, following the route traced on the map at left.

Near Williamsburg at the Pamunkey River were two popular crossings, Claiborne's Ferry (below) and Williams' Ferry (above), either of which he may have used. From the ferries Washington could go along good roads through Tidewater Virginia almost all the way to Winchester. Riding hard, he could expect to cover 100 miles to Fredericksburg in two days. At Alexandria and Winchester he could buy horses and baggage. Beyond Winchester, as a traveler wrote, the roads were "excessive bad [leading] over prodigious mountains." At one point the road crossed a stream 20 times in three miles. At Wills Creek, Md. (soon to be called Fort Cumberland) Washington was to pick up a guide.

for the courier

land) Washington was to pick up a guide.

Beyond Wills Creek there were almost no settlers, and the only food travelers could depend on was what they could carry with them or what game they could shoot. Wills Creek itself consisted of a cabin and a warehouse of the Ohio Trading Company. The settlements beyond, like Murthering Town and Venango, were Indian villages. The roads were Indian paths and although the local Indians were friendly enough, hostile Indians who favored the French were known to be wandering through the forests. The journey from Williamsburg to Fort Le Boeuf was 360 miles as the crow flies but two or three times that distance as a horseman rides.

WILLIAMS' FERRY landed at Poplar Grove, the house at top left. There, traditionally, Washington first met Martha Custis, whom he married in 1759.

WILLIAMS' LANDING (below) still shows track where wagons came down to the water. In Washington's day there was a wharf where the ferry tied up.

An easy ride through rural Virginia

Between Claiborne's and Williams' ferries the old colonial road passed St. John's Church in one of the oldest parishes in Virginia. Washington knew it quite well for he passed by it many times during his life and he may have stopped to worship there on a Sunday. He was not a particularly religious man, but in those days Virginia colonists were sticklers for church attendance.

To cross the Mattaponi River Washington would have used Todd's Bridge near the present town of Aylett. The bridge was the center of a thriving settlement and William Todd, the man who owned it, also operated a warehouse and an inn—called an ordinary because it served "ordinary" (regular) meals at fixed hours. The modern road crosses the Mattaponi a couple of miles downstream.

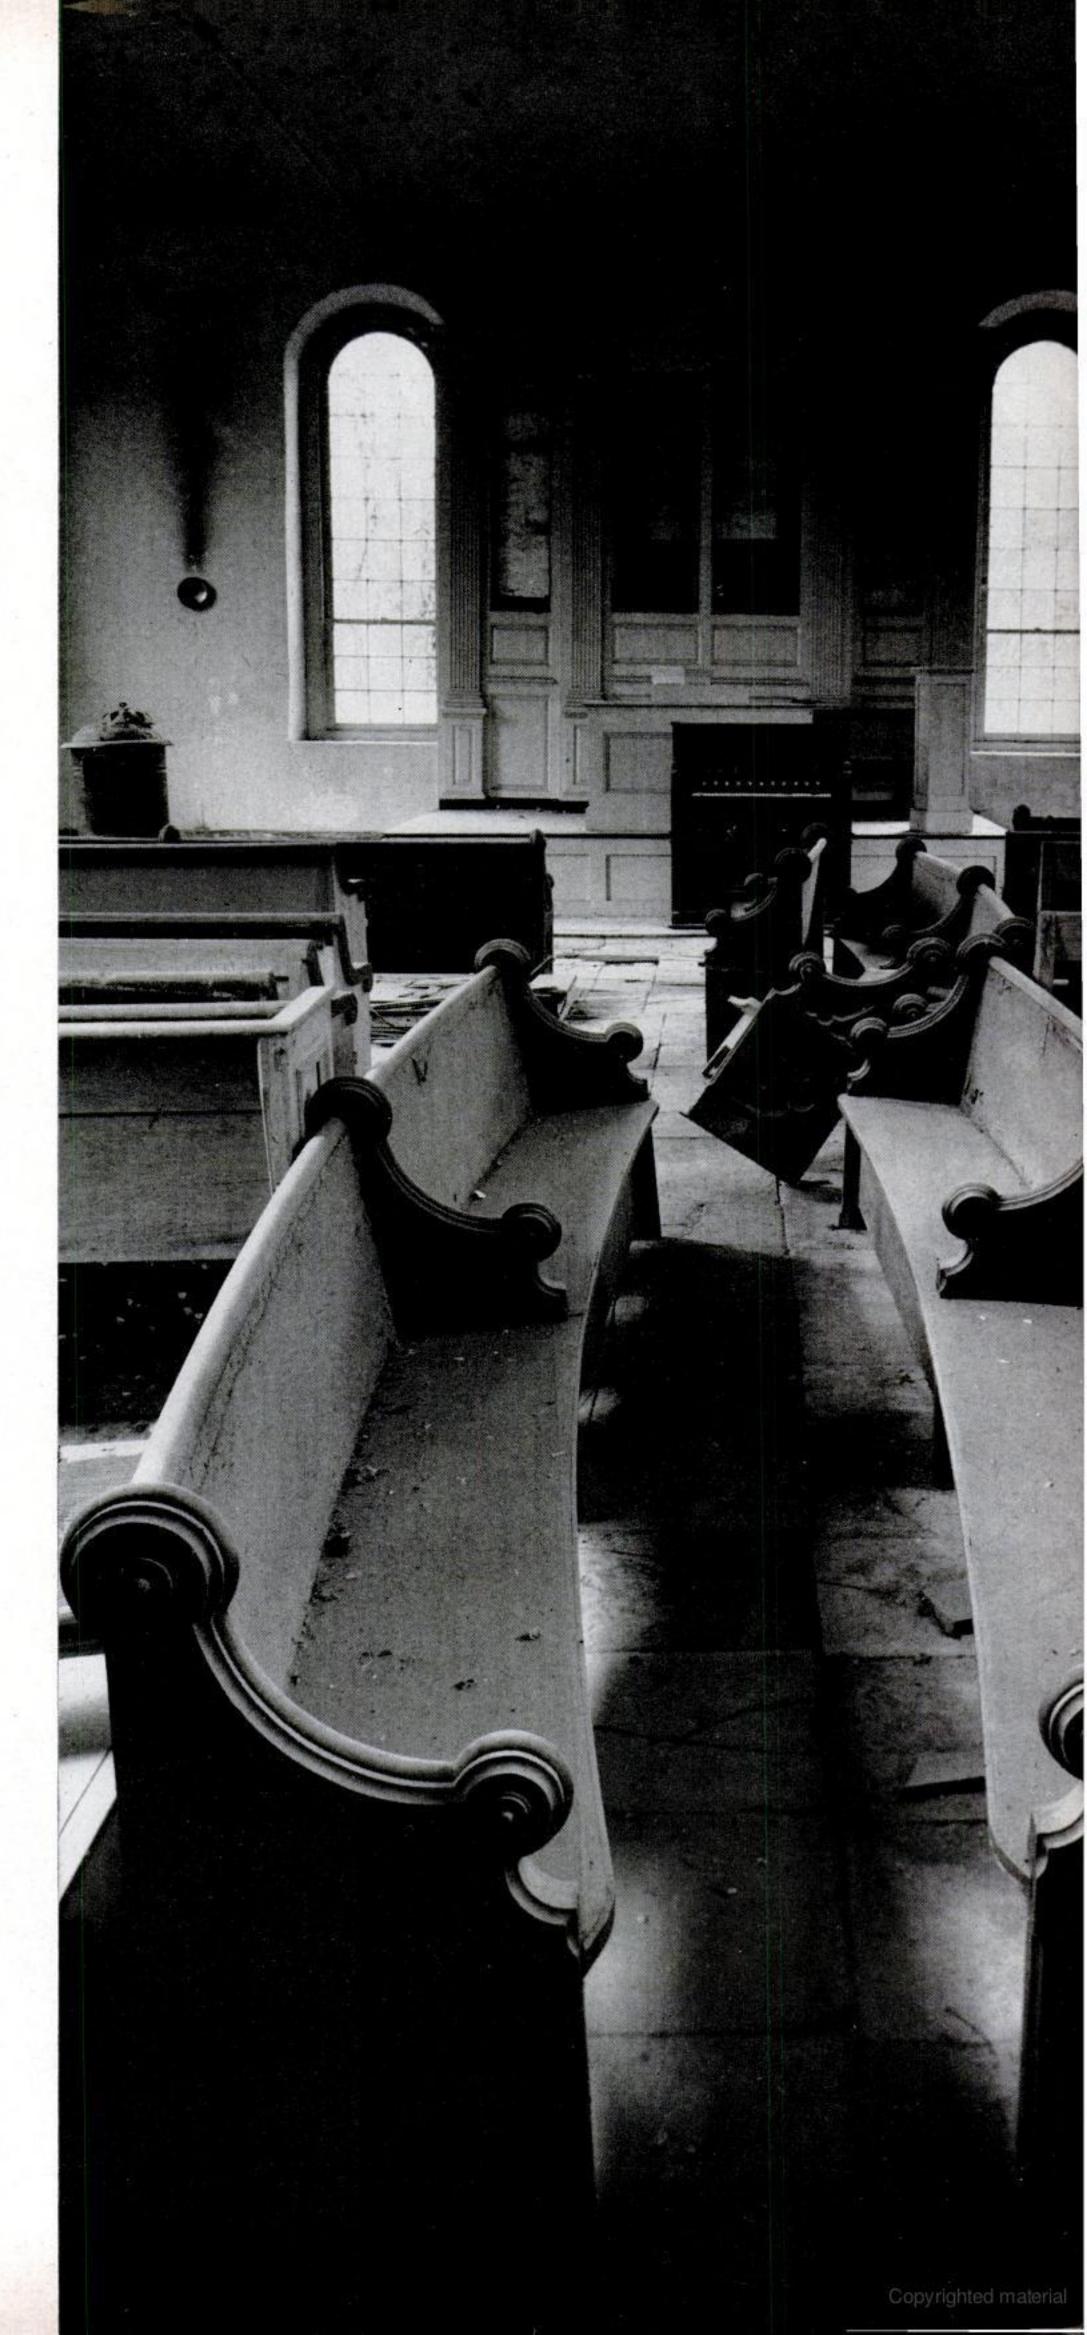

While in Fredericksburg, Washington may have stayed at Ferry Farm where he had grown up and where his mother lived. While there he got in touch with a young French-speaking Dutchman named Jacob van Braam and persuaded him to come along as interpreter. Together they set out on the trip to Alexandria where Washington purchased some of his "necessaries." There (or perhaps at Winchester) he bought a tent which he had learned from his life as a surveyor provided "some screen from the inclemency. . . ."

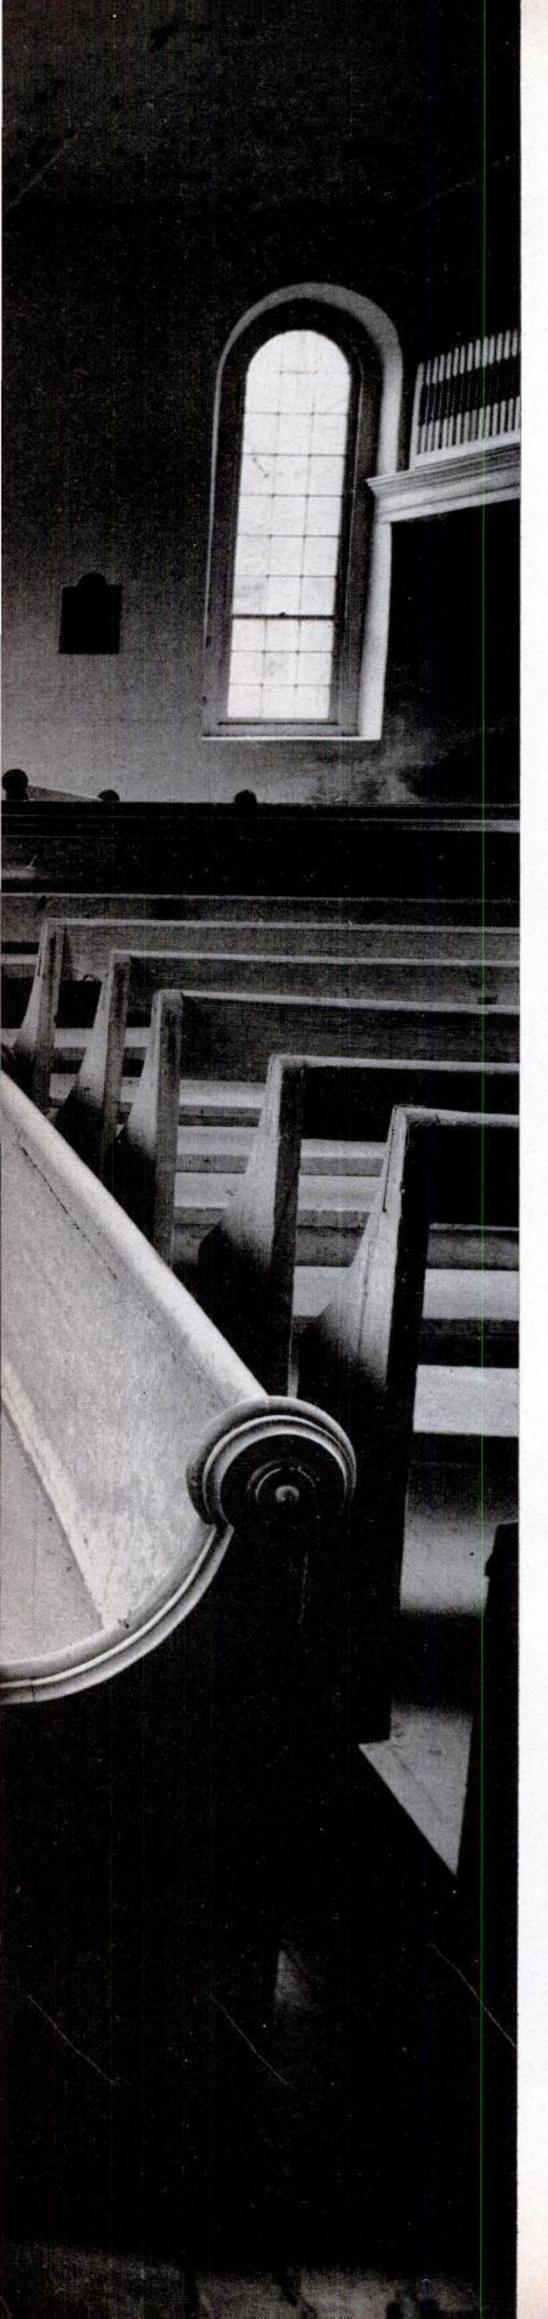

In Alexandria, Washington had many close friends. One family, the Carlyles, had only a year before moved into their new house (opposite page) and Washington probably stopped in to warm himself before the fire in the kitchen. It was in this house two years later that Washington first met General Edward Braddock when the British general was planning his ill-fated attack on the French at Fort Duquesne.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, long neglected, stands not far off present state Route 30. Its brick walls are laid in a colonial pattern of varicolored bricks.

A JUMBLE OF PEWS remains inside St. John's (right). At left is box pew like those used in colonial times. Before the dais is organ from a later period.

MATTAPONI RIVER CROSSING was made over Todd's Bridge, which once stood here. The road, cut deep into the earth by wagon wheels and rain, has not been used for more than 50 years and is now grown up with trees. Foundations of houses which stood nearby still turn up when land is plowed.

THE CARLYLE KITCHEN, where Washington probably stopped, served the Thomas Carlyle House, built in Alexandria in 1752. It is now a museum. On the table is a pewter plate, a wooden spoon and a stirring paddle. On the mantel and in the window are molds into which tallow was poured to make candles.

Shenandoah and into the wilderness

From Alexandria, Washington pushed for the west. The road led across the Blue Ridge Mountains at Vestal's Gap from which he looked down on the sweeping curves of the Shenandoah and the valley beyond. Jogging down the steep road to the river, Washington set off through the fertile countryside to Winchester.

Beyond Winchester were the ridges of the Allegheny Mountains which the pioneers called the "Endless Mountains." On entering them Washington ran into endless bad weather as well. "Throughout the whole journey," he wrote, "we met with one continued series of cold, wet weather, which occasioned very uncomfortable lodgings. . . ." At Wills Creek, where he arrived 15 days after leaving Williamsburg, he found woodsman Christopher Gist ready to guide him, and hired four other men as "servitors."

The first leg of the journey beyond followed

THE SHENANDOAH RIVER sweeps through the valley in a great curve below Vestal's Gap where Washington crossed the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Washington was familiar with the valley which he had visited on a surveying trip for Lord Fairfax when he was 16. He had written in the first of his many diaries, ". . . We went through most beautiful groves of sugar trees and spent the best part of the day in admiring the trees and richness of the land."

an old Indian trail, called Nemacolin's Path. (Washington was to use this same path when he returned that summer to fight the French at Fort Necessity, and Braddock pushed over it in 1755.) As the party moved west it ran into worse weather. "The excessive rains and vast quantity of snow . . . ," Washington wrote, "prevented our reaching [the Monongahela] till Thursday." It had taken eight days to ride 109 miles, an average of only 14 miles a day.

LAUREL HILL (right) lay beyond Great Crossing — of the Youghiogheny in country "... uninhabited by anything but wild Indians, bears and rattlesnakes."

JUMONVILLE GLEN was on Washington's trail between Wills Creek and the Forks of the Ohio. Here, when he returned the next summer, he deployed his British force to surprise some French troops and score his first military victory.

FORT NECESSITY, reconstructed on original site, marks Washington's first defeat. It was built on low ground which he thought a "charming field for an encounter." But the French took high ground nearby and forced him to capitulate.

A cold and fateful end

Through snow-filled forests Washington made his way to the French at Fort Le Boeuf, delivered Dinwiddie's letter, snooped about a bit, then headed home with the French reply. On the return the horses gave out and he and Gist continued on foot to the Allegheny. An Indian shot at them and Washington nearly drowned when he fell into the river.

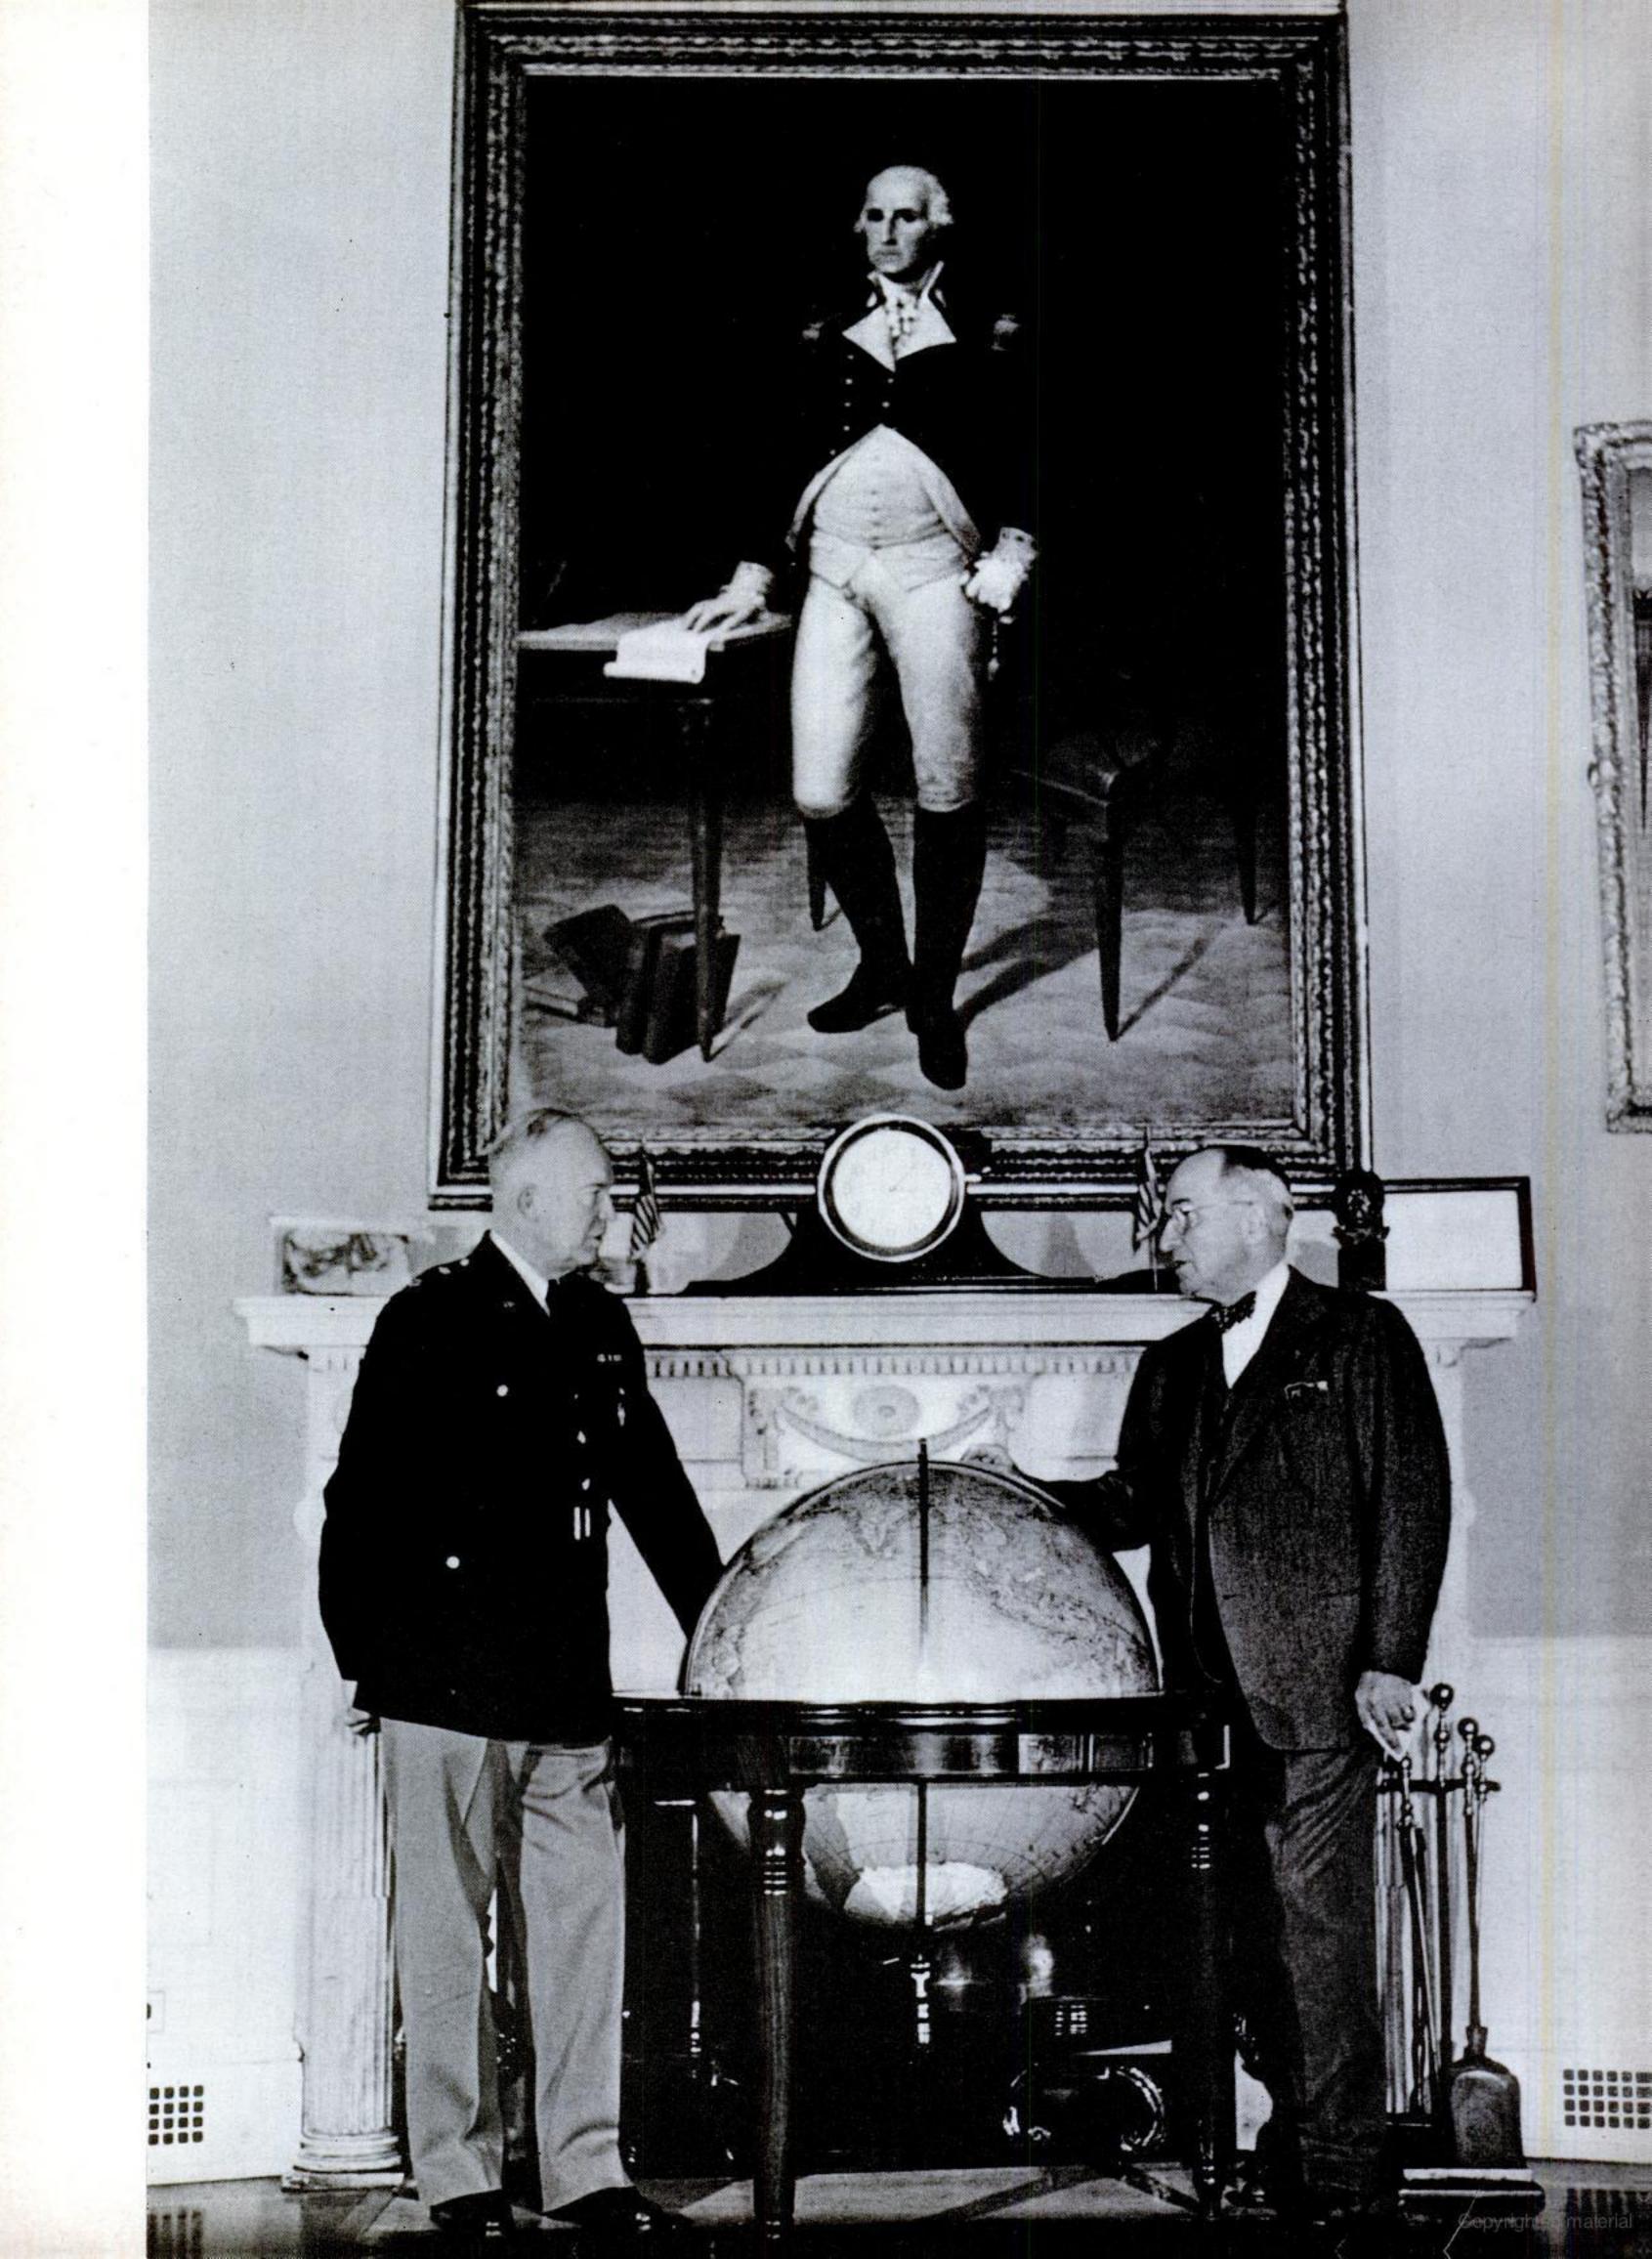

Back in Williamsburg he handed over the French refusal to withdraw, and the news that the French had 220 canoes to carry them down to the Ohio. The colonies sent a force to stop them. With it went George Washington, now a lieutenant colonel in command of 159 men, to overwhelm a French detachment at Jumonville Glen. "This obscure skirmish," as Francis Parkman said, "began the war that set the world on fire." This was the start of the French and Indian and the Seven Years' Wars. Six weeks later, outnumbered, Washington was trounced by the French at Fort Necessity. But he had learned how to fight in the forest and was on his way—to be the hero of Braddock's defeat and, in time, the soldier the colonies naturally turned to when they rose against the king.

FRENCH CREEK was the last creek Washington had to ford. Gist wrote in his diary that day, "Set out, traveled about eight miles, and encamped. Our Indians killed a bear. Here we had a creek to cross, very deep; we got over on a tree. . . ."

A CANDID ANALYSIS OF '52 ELECTION

Truman tells how 'millions of votes' may have been 'needlessly sacrificed' by Stevenson and describes a tense postelection meeting with Eisenhower

MY decision not to be a candidate for re-election in 1952 goes back to the day of my inauguration in 1949. On this day my mind kept reviewing the many grave problems that confronted the nation and the world. And I found myself thinking about my own future, and how long a man ought to stay in the presidency, and a nation's need for constant renewal of leadership. I now was certain that I would not run again. But I could not share this decision with anyone. By the very nature of his office this is one secret a President must keep to himself to the last possible moment.

More than a year later, on April 16, 1950, I wrote out my thoughts and my intentions in a memorandum which I locked away: "I am not a candidate for nomination by the Democratic Convention. . . . I have been in public office well over thirty years, having been President of the United States almost two complete terms. . . .

"In my opinion eight years as President is enough and sometimes too much for any man to serve in that capacity.

"There is a lure in power. It can get into a man's blood just as gambling and lust for money have been known to do.

"... I know I could be elected again and continue to break the old precedent as it was broken by F.D.R. It should not be done. That precedent should continue . . . by custom based on the honor of the man in the office.

"Therefore, to re-establish that custom, although by a quibble I could say I've only had one term, I am not a candidate and will not accept the nomination for another term."

In March 1951, I took the memorandum out at the Little White House in Key West and read it to my White House staff. The reaction was to be expected. The staff responded with deep emotion and expressions of protest and disappointment. They pleaded with me not to make public any such announcement. But I had no intention of doing this until the proper time.

The man who occupies the high office of President is always aware that he is there only because more people wanted him than wanted the other fellow. But if he is to judge his situation by the people around him, he will hear a hundred voices telling him that he is the greatest man in the world for every one that tells him he is not. A President, if he is to have clear perspective and never get out of touch, must cut through the voices around him, know his history and make certain of the reliability of the information he gets.

I was certain that it would be better for me, the party and the country to have a change in leadership.

The most logical and qualified candidate, it appeared to me, was the Chief Justice of the United States, Fred M. Vinson. Vinson had a rich background of experience in all three branches of our government. He was gifted with a sense of personal and political loyalty seldom found among the top men in Washington. Too often loyalties are breached in Washington in the rivalries for political advantage. Not so with Vinson. He was a devoted and undemonstrative patriot who could also consistently practice personal and party loyalty.

In the summer of 1950 I first approached Vinson with the suggestion that he should become the candidate to succeed me. But he declined.

In the fall of 1951 I invited Vinson to visit me at the Little White House in Key West, and there I resumed my talks with him about his becoming the Democratic candidate for President. We talked about it from one end to the other, and he finally said that he would speak to Mrs. Vinson about it. He always consulted her when anything vital came up in his career. I have never come in contact with a more devoted couple.

Back in Washington, Vinson told me that after talking it over with Mrs. Vinson and after most serious consideration, he still felt honestly and in his heart that he did not think he should use the Court as a steppingstone to the presidency. But shortly after this meeting and after I had another talk, this time with Mrs. Vinson, the Chief Justice firmly declined on the basis of his physical condition. I think that if Vinson had become President, he would have ranked high among Presidents—but it probably would have further shortened his life.

Man who had 'what it takes'

THE field was now wide open as far as I was concerned. I began to canvass the situation from one end of the country to the other. On May 8, 1951 I wrote the following memorandum: "... If we can find a man who will ... continue the Fair Deal, Point IV, fair employment, parity for farmers and a consumers' protective policy, the Democratic party can win from now on.

"It seems to me now that the governor of Illinois has the background and what it takes. Think I'll talk to him."

I liked Adlai Stevenson's political and administrative background. I admired him personally. I liked his forthright and energetic campaign for the governorship. He proved in that contest that he possessed a knowledge and "feel" for politics and that he had learned that a knowledge of politics is necessary to carry out the function of our form of free government.

I had an especially high regard for Stevenson's many contributions to the federal government as special assistant to many agency heads and Cabinet members.

Here are some notes I made after my talks with Governor Stevenson: "... I told him that I would not run for President again and that it was my opinion he was best-fitted for the place....

"... I told him what I thought the presidency is, how it has grown into the most powerful and greatest office in the history of the world. I asked him to take it and told him that if he would agree he could be nominated. I told him that a President in the White House always controlled the National Convention.

1952 DEMOCRATIC HOPEFULS meet on TV show before convention. All actively sought nomination while Stevenson remained non-committal despite Truman's blessing. Kefauver beat Truman in New Hampshire primary before Truman announced he would not run again.

TRUMAN CONTINUED

"On March 4 Governor Stevenson came to see me again, this time at his request, to tell me that he had made a commitment to run for re-election in Illinois and that he did not think he could go back on that commitment honorably. I appreciated his viewpoint, and I honored him for it...."

But I felt that in Stevenson I had found the man to whom I could safely turn over the responsibilities of party leadership. I felt certain that he would see it as his duty to seek the nomination.

On March 29, at the annual Jefferson-Jackson Day Dinner in the National Guard Armory in Washington, D.C., I announced that I would not run again.

There was a moment of stunned silence in the hall. Then shouts of protest went up, and they were repeated when I left the hall. When I arrived at the White House I found the ushers and doormen almost in tears and the two maids who were taking care of my mother-in-law were weeping. I told them to calm down and stay on the job.

I am inclined to think that if I had announced early in 1950 or 1951 that I intended to carry the fight myself to a conclusion, General Eisenhower would not have been the Republican candidate—and perhaps not the President. I hold to that opinion because I am sure that Eisenhower in 1952 thought that he would have no fight for the election and that perhaps the Democrats would nominate him also.

There were a number of other good men who were frankly candidates for the Democratic nomination. I gave careful study and consideration to each.

One of the ablest and most deserving was Averell Harriman. His record of government service was long and distinguished. I held Harriman in the highest regard, and still do, but I felt that with his limited experience in elective politics and no experience in campaigning for an elective office, he was somewhat handicapped at this particular time.

Some weeks before the convention Harriman came to see me to ask if I would be agreeable to the New York delegation's putting him in nomination. I replied to Harriman that it was all right for him to take the step but that when the time came for the convention to nominate its candidate for President, I wanted him to be in line to help nominate that man, whoever he was. Some of the party leaders also approached me to ask if they could help Harriman, and I told them of course they could. I assured Harriman that if it came to a showdown between him and Stevenson, I was committed to Stevenson. This understanding between Harriman and myself was behind some of the developments at the convention in July.

Estes Kefauver made an energetic and extensive campaign for the nomination. His record as a member of the House and his work in the Senate was in most respects highly commendable. I knew of his popularity. I approved of what he undertook to do with his investigating committee, but I did not approve of the methods he used and the way he went about it.

Robert S. Kerr from Oklahoma was another favorite-son candidate. He was an able, courageous and effective senator. Unfortunately, his background of representing the oil and gas interests in the Senate made him ineligible in my opinion.

Dick Russell of Georgia was a candidate to be reckoned with.

He had ability, integrity and honesty. He was one of the bestinformed men in the Senate and perhaps the best-informed on the agricultural situation of the nation. But being from Georgia, where the race issue was so heated, he did not have a serious chance of being nominated. I believe that if Russell had been from Indiana or Missouri or Kentucky, he may very well have been the President of the United States.

As the time for the convention drew nearer, Adlai Stevenson continued to be reluctant to commit himself. It therefore became necessary, with the convention close at hand, for the party to decide on some other strong candidate and unite behind him. This is where Vice President Alben Barkley played a key and dramatic role. Barkley was at the height of his popularity with the people, with the party and with the Congress. But for his age he would have been a most logical candidate.

About two weeks before the convention Barkley let it be known that he would like to be a candidate for the presidency. I invited him to a meeting at the White House at which Frank McKinney, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and members of my staff were present. We informed Barkley that Stevenson had refused to run and that if he (Barkley) was serious about wanting the nomination, we would support him.

Bad-luck breakfast

Barkley went to the Chicago convention on the opening day, July 21, with that commitment. But in one essential respect Barkley failed to follow our suggestions to him. In meeting with the leaders of labor to enlist their support, we told him to be sure to see the leaders one at a time. Instead he arranged a breakfast meeting with all at once. We knew that they would never commit themselves in a crowd, and all that came of this meeting with the labor leaders was a unanimous turndown. I am of the opinion that if Barkley had been advised by a manager skilled in dealing with labor, this rejection by labor would never have occurred.

That same afternoon Barkley called me in Washington. He told me that his wife and his supporters had advised him that it would be best for him to withdraw, and that he had already announced his decision to the press. I told Barkley I thought he was acting on an impulse and that he would regret it.

Shortly after my conversation with Barkley, I received a call from Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer to tell me that he did not think it was right for Barkley to be allowed to leave Chicago until he had made a personal appearance before the convention. I agreed and telephoned Chairman McKinney. On the evening of July 23 Alben Barkley was escorted to the speaker's platform to receive one of the greatest ovations ever accorded anyone at a national political convention.

Barkley's extemporaneous address was acclaimed as one of the most heart-warming and moving speeches ever brought before such a gathering. It was the "Veep" at his best. I think it was the greatest and grandest exit a major withdrawing candidate could make.

But this extraordinary picture was soon to be spoiled when unexpectedly three delegates from other states than his own put Barkley's name in nomination.

On the following day, July 24, Governor Stevenson called to ask whether it would embarrass me if he allowed his name to be placed in nomination. I replied with a show of exasperation and some rather vigorous words and concluded by saying to Stevenson, "I have been trying since January to get you to say that. Why would it embarrass me?"

From here on events began to move swiftly and to shape the course of the convention leading to the nomination of Stevenson.

Actually, if Barkley had not withdrawn when he did, and if he had not made it irrevocable in his call to me, I would not at this late date have been able to tell Stevenson that I would support him, and Barkley would have been the Democratic nominee.

In his campaign for the presidency, Stevenson lived up to his reputation as a man of eloquence. His eloquence was real because his words gave definition and meaning to the major issues of our time. He was particularly effective in expressing this nation's foreign policy. He made no demagogic statements. He made no extravagant promises. He was not vague with generalities but would talk to the point. While some felt he may have talked over the heads of some people, he was uncompromising in being himself. His was a great campaign and did credit to the party and the nation. He did not appeal to the weakness but to the strength of the people. He did not trade principles for votes. What he said in the South he would say in the North, and what he said in the East he would say in the West. It will be to his credit that, although given provocation by the opposition, he stayed away from personalities and accusations.

But Stevenson's attitude toward the President he hoped to succeed was a mystery to me for some time, and I believe Stevenson made several mistakes. Whether this was due to the urgings of advisers, bad information or, perhaps, to the contagion other good citizens were suffering as a result of reading the anti-Democratic press, I do not know.

The first mistake he made was to fire the chairman of the Democratic National Committee and to move his campaign headquarters to Springfield, Ill., giving the impression that he was seeking to disassociate himself from the Administration in Washington, and perhaps from me. How Stevenson hoped he could persuade the American voters to maintain the Democratic party in power while seeming to disown powerful elements of it I do not know.

Stevenson, during an interview in Oregon, quoted a reporter's phrase in answering a question and said that he would clean up "the mess in Washington." I wondered if he had been taken in by the Republican fraudulent build-up of a few flyspecks on our Washington windows into a big blot or "mess." For several years the Republican opposition had tried to make a case against the Administration only to find that the Administration was always alert in rooting out corruption or bad practices wherever they existed. As long as there are those who will pay to corrupt, there will always be some who will yield to corruption. This is as true in private business as it is in public or government business.

By this inadvertence in Oregon, Stevenson provided the Republican opposition with the audacity to go ahead with the two phony issues of the Eisenhower campaign—corruption and Korea.

Stevenson vs. the professionals

ANOTHER mistake in Stevenson's campaign was his failure to coordinate and give proper recognition to existing Democratic organizations in the major population centers. This came as a surprise to me. I had attributed to him realistic political judgment as governor of Illinois.

By alienating many influential Democratic political leaders at the outset Stevenson may have thought he was attaining full freedom of action. But in reality he needlessly sacrificed basic political backing and perhaps millions in votes. There is more to the business of party leadership and party politics than the making of speeches, even though the speeches may be brilliant. A politician soon learns that his performance on the stage depends as much on the stagehands as on his own skill. Stevenson now knows as well as anyone that politics is a highly organized effort on the part of a great many people where amateurs must learn quickly or fail.

The difference between the two major political parties in this country, as I see it, is that whereas Republicans descend to the people at each election to court them, we Democrats are always with and among them and maintain constant contact through established political organizations. Hence, a Democratic candidate for any office will usually fare better in his campaign if he does not throw away organization support without good reason.

Another mistake in the 1952 campaign was that there was little or no coordination between Washington and Springfield. Actually, there were two campaigns being waged by the Democrats, and this often led to overlapping and confusion. It was an unfortunate situation which could have been avoided. When it seemed to me almost too late, Stevenson asked me to get into the campaign and I gave it all I had.

It seems to me that another mistake by Mr. Stevenson was to allow himself to go on the defensive on the question of so-called Communists in government. The most brazen lie of the century has been fabricated by reckless demagogues among the Republicans to the effect that Democrats were soft on Communists. The Republicans used the technique of fear and the Big Lie to confuse and frighten our people. The historic fact is that it was under a Democratic administration that economic and military measures were taken which saved Western civilization from Communist control.

It was the Democratic administration that prosecuted the known Communist conspirators in this country and convicted them without throwing away our Bill of Rights by resorting to totalitarian methods. What is just as important, we strengthened our economy by maintaining full employment and prosperity and thus helped defeat Communism where hunger and misery threatened free peoples. This is a record without parallel in history. All Americans, whatever their politics, may feel justly proud of the role of this country in this great period of continuous struggle for the world's freedom.

It seems to me that Stevenson, who knew the facts since he took part in the Administration's fight against Communism, as had Eisenhower, should have resisted vigorously any maneuvers to put him on the defensive as an opponent of Communism. He should never have yielded to the challenge of contemptible demagogues, many of whom flinched while the Administration fought Communism.

I am sure that if Stevenson had accepted in good faith the proposition I made to him on Jan. 30, 1952, and enabled us to make the proper build-up, there would have been no contest to speak of at Chicago, and I think he would have received at least three million more votes. Perhaps this would not have produced enough more votes to elect him, but there would have been enough to rebuke Eisenhower for his demagoguery and endorsement of the Jenner-McCarthy "Big Lie."

Having said this, I want to make clear that my admiration for Stevenson as the spokesman and the standard-bearer of the party was justified by his brilliant exposition of the main issues. I hold him in the highest regard for his intellectual courage. It took courage to speak with candor and forthrightness in the face of the demagogic campaigning conducted by the Republicans. Stevenson, even in defeat, left a profound and enduring impression on the American people. The nation and the party were richer for his inspiring and high-level campaign.

Stevenson, of course, faced very formidable opposition in the great popularity of General Eisenhower whom the Republicans had appropriated. Any Democratic nominee would have had to face the enormous psychological handicap of campaigning against a very popular military hero. Some Republican leaders believed they could not win with Senator Taft or with any other traditional Republican. The Republicans, being a minority party, knew that they had to borrow strength from the Democratic and independent vote. The popularity of a war hero like that of General Eisenhower seemed to provide a rare political opportunity to a rebellious Republican clique.

In 1948 and 1952 there were even some Democrats who, fearful of defeat, also wanted to seize upon the popularity of this man. Many of us did not know whether Eisenhower was a Republican or a Democrat until he announced himself as a candidate on the Republican side. He had been persuaded that his popularity was such that he would have no opposition in the Republican party, and he had even been encouraged to feel that the Democrats might very well make it unanimous by also nominating him on the Democratic ticket. These advisers apparently did not speak for the entire Republican leadership and certainly not for the Democrats. There followed a bitter struggle in the Republican leadership, and Eisenhower found himself knee-deep in politics. He had to make use of the machinations of Dewey and Brownell as well as of his personal popularity to win the Republican nomination.

Those of us who knew Eisenhower through his long service in uniform under two Democratic Presidents had reason to hope that he would campaign on a high level. He had been assigned important roles and given a part in the historic struggle of the battle against the totalitarian powers and in the military rebuilding of the Western powers in the postwar period. He measured up to his assignments with distinction and the well-deserved gratitude of the Allied world. He had the opportunity to know and to understand what was happening in the world and what we were doing as a nation.

We were shocked and disappointed to find that he would lend himself to the type of campaign that followed: He permitted a campaign of distortion and vilification that he could not possibly have believed was true. There were mass accusations of subversion and corruption against the Democratic administration. Yet two years of Republican rule have failed to produce any evidence to justify the vile accusations of the campaign, despite the feverish searchings of his Attorney General. Hard as it was for us to understand this side of Eisenhower now revealed to us, it was even more of a jolt to see our foreign policy used as a political football. But when our struggle in Korea was appropriated for partisan political purposes at a time when we were negotiating for armistice in the face of a most stubborn and tricky foe, I felt that we had reached a situation that was politically and morally intolerable. I could understand certain extreme isolationists using Korea as a political weapon; but I will never understand how a responsible military man, fully familiar with the extreme delicacy of our negotiations to end hostilities, could use this tragedy for political advantage. I regret that such a chapter should have been written into our political history.

When General Eisenhower, in his Detroit speech, proposed that if elected he would journey to Korea in person to put an end to the fighting, he must have known that he was weakening our hand in negotiations. He must have known that he could accomplish little, if anything, by such a trip. He also must have known that by making this statement he was leading the American people to believe that the day after he became President he would bring them peace in Korea. The fighting continued for many months after the new Administration took over, and peace in Korea is yet to be achieved. No man in our national life had a better reason to know or a better opportunity to find out the nature of the enemy. No man had less right to use this crisis for political purposes.

'Frantic expediency'

THERE is something else that I shall never be able to understand. When he delivered a major speech in Milwaukee, General Eisenhower was persuaded to delete from his speech a personal tribute to his former chief, General Marshall. Eisenhower agreed to the deletion in order to make possible the presence of Senator McCarthy on the platform with him. I would like to believe that in this instance Eisenhower permitted himself to be badly advised because of his political inexperience. It may be that Eisenhower had yielded to frantic expediency because of his discovery that he could not get the nomination or the presidency without a contest and a vigorous personal campaign. In order to win the nomination, he had to go in hot pursuit of delegates which involved a bitter attack on Taft. And then he had to wage an all-out campaign to win the election.

General Eisenhower won. He received the greatest number of votes cast for any presidential candidate in the history of the nation. But proportionately he did not come close to the majorities of Franklin Roosevelt in 1932 and in 1936, or that of Harding in 1920 or Herbert Hoover in 1928. But for the first time in the nation's history more than 60 million persons went to the polls and even though Stevenson came within 162,000 votes of surpassing even the total of F.D.R. in 1936, he was beaten by more than six million votes.

Were it not for millions of one-time voters, I doubt if the Republicans would have carried either the Senate or the House of Representatives, even by the slim margin which they were able to squeeze out.

But it is as dramatic as it is significant that more than 27 million Democrats resisted the appeal of a military hero to stand by their basic party convictions and voted for Stevenson.

I SENT the following message to General Eisenhower from the train at Martinsburg, W. Va.: "Congratulations on your overwhelming victory. The 1954 budget must be presented to the Congress before January 15th. All the preliminary figures have been made up. You should have a representative meet with the director of the Bureau of the Budget immediately. The Independence will be at your disposal if you still desire to go to Korea."

At 2:17 p.m., Nov. 5, I received the following telegram: "I deeply appreciate your courteous and generous telegram. I shall try to make arrangements within next two or three days to have a personal representative to sit with the director of the Budget. I am most appreciative of your offer of the use of the Independence but assure you that any suitable transport plane that one of the services could make available will be satisfactory for my planned trip to Korea. With your permission I shall give the Secretary of Defense the earliest possible notice of my proposed Dwight D. Eisenhower."

Upon receiving General Eisenhower's telegram, I sent another message to him that same day: "Thank you for your prompt and courteous reply to my telegram. I know you will agree with me that there ought to be an orderly transfer of the business of the executive branch of the government to the new Administration, particularly in view of the international dangers and problems that confront this country and the whole free world. I invite you, therefore, to meet with me in the White House at your early convenience to discuss the problem of this transition period, so that it may be clear to all the world that this nation is united in its struggle for freedom and peace."

On Nov. 6, I received this telegram from General Eisenhower: "Thank you for your telegram. I am gratified by your suggestion that we have a personal meeting in the interest of orderly transition. Because I obviously require a reasonable time for conversations and conferences leading up to the designation of important assistants I respectfully suggest that we tentatively plan the proposed meeting for the early part of the week beginning November 17. In the meantime with your permission I shall try to take immediate advantage of your suggestion concerning a budgetary representative and will additionally propose other individuals for indoctrination in several of the other departments in the Federal government. In this way our own conference can achieve maximum results. I share your hope that we may present to the world an American unity in basic issues."

'Fundamental things'

THAT same day I had already sent a letter by special courier to General Eisenhower bringing to his attention some special international situations on which I had to make policy decisions: "... There are some really fundamental things pending before the United Nations that must be met in a positive manner. I wish you would suggest somebody, in addition to the person who is to talk to the Budget Director, to discuss these matters authoritatively with the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Defense. . . .

"All these things are vital policy matters which can only be decided by the President of the United States, but I would prefer not to make firm decisions on these matters without your concurrence, although the decisions will have to be made. These things affect the whole American policy with regard to the free world.

"If you could designate someone to act authoritatively for you, or come yourself to sit in on these meetings, it would be the proper solution to the problem."

I thought it was an omission in our political tradition that a retiring President did not make it his business to facilitate the transfer of the government to his successor.

This omission goes back to the very early days in our history. John Adams, the second President, left the White House in the middle of the night because he did not want to meet Jefferson on the day of his inauguration. In more recent history Woodrow Wilson got no turnover of government from President Taft. Wilson did not turn over the government to Harding, but at that time Wilson was an invalid.

Herbert Hoover invited President-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt to come to the White House shortly after the election in 1932 to discuss the national crisis. Roosevelt went to the White House twice—once in late November and once in January. But he declined to share the responsibility of actually making decisions and taking actions. Roosevelt gave as his reason that he had no constitutional authority as President-elect to share in the responsibility of decisions which only a President can exercise. Except for the last two weeks before the inauguration when the outgoing and the incoming Secretaries of the Treasury worked together informally, there was no administrative turnover.

I was determined that we should have an orderly turnover of every department of the government to assist the incoming Administration to keep this nation a going concern.

On Nov. 7, I received the following reply from General Eisenhower: "Because I believe so firmly in true bi-partisan approach to our foreign problems, I am especially appreciative of your letter. . . . However, because I have had no opportunity to accumulate a staff of advisors and assistants, it will take me a little time to designate anyone who could participate profitably in this kind of conference. I shall give priority attention to the matter and I will communicate with you further no later than Monday next, November 10.

"In your letter you use the word 'authoritative' by which I take it you mean that my representative be able accurately to reflect my views. This he will be able to do, but quite naturally this will likewise be the limit of his authority since I myself can have none under current conditions."

Two days later, Nov. 9, President-elect Eisenhower telegraphed: "... I am designating Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., of Massachusetts, to serve as my personal liaison with those departments and agencies of government, other than the Bureau of the Budget. . . .

"I am also designating Joseph M. Dodge, of Detroit, to act as my personal liaison with the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. . . ."

A problem and an invitation

EANTIME Secretary of State Acheson had expressed his concern to me about the effect of the proposed trip of Eisenhower to Korea upon the armistice negotiations and the U.N. support of those negotiations. [Acheson wrote a memorandum stating that speculation at the U.N. over Eisenhower's coming trip to Korea was causing uncertainty over the armistice negotiations there and might delay U.N. passage of a U.S.-sponsored resolution favoring voluntary repatriation of prisoners of war. Acheson suggested that a statement by Eisenhower reaffirming his support for the current U.S. position would help to clarify the situation. To explain the background of his meeting with General Eisenhower on these subjects Mr. Truman goes back to an early period in the campaign.]

Even before the Democratic and Republican conventions in Chicago had nominated their candidates, I had made up my mind to keep both candidates informed about the important developments of our foreign policy. For this reason, on Aug. 13, even as the election campaigns got under way, I sent the following telegram to General Eisenhower: "I would be most happy if you would attend a Cabinet luncheon next Tuesday the nineteenth. If you want to bring your press secretary and any other member of your staff I'd be glad to have them. If you can arrive at about twelve fifteen, I'll have General Smith and the Central Intelligence Agency give you a briefing on the foreign situation. Then we will have luncheon with the Cabinet and after that if you like I'll have my entire staff report to you on the situation in the White House and in that way you will be entirely briefed on what takes place. I've made arrangements with the Central Intelligence Agency to furnish you once a week with the world situation as I also have for Governor Stevenson."

The following day Eisenhower declined my invitation, replying as follows: "Thank you for your offer to have me briefed by certain agencies of the government on the foreign situation. On the personal side I am also grateful for your luncheon invitation.

"In my current position as standard bearer of the Republican Party and of other Americans who want to bring about a change in the national Government, it is my duty to remain free to analyze publicly the policies and acts of the present administration whenever it appears to me to be proper and in the country's interests.

"During the present period the people are deciding our country's leadership for the next four years. The decision rests between the Republican nominee and the candidate you and your Cabinet are supporting and with whom you conferred before sending your message. In such circumstances and in such a period I believe our communications should be only those which are known to all the American people. Consequently I think it would be unwise and result in confusion in the public mind if I were to attend the meeting in the White House to which you have invited me.

"As you know, the problems which you suggest for discussion are those with which I have lived for many years, In spite of this I would instantly change this decision in the event there should arise a grave emergency. There is nothing in your message to indicate that this is presently the case.

"With respect to the weekly reports from the Central Intelligence Agency that you kindly offered to send me, I will welcome these reports. In line with my view, however, that the American people are entitled to all the facts in the international situation, save only in those cases where the security of the United States is involved, I would want it understood that the possession of these reports will in no other way limit my freedom to discuss or analyze foreign programs as my judgment dictates."

Eisenhower's telegram angered me. It was apparent that the politicians had already begun to mishandle him. On Aug. 16 I wrote in longhand this personal letter to Eisenhower:

"Dear Ike: I am sorry if I caused you any embarrassment.

"What I've always had in mind was and is a continuing foreign policy. You know that is a fact because you had a part in outlining it.

"Partisan politics should stop at the boundaries of the United States. I'm extremely sorry that you have allowed a bunch of screwballs to come between us.

"You have made a bad mistake, and I'm hoping that it won't injure this great Republic.

"There has never been one like it and I want to see it continue regardless of the man who occupies the most important position in the history of the world.

"May God guide you and give you light.

"From a man who has always been your friend and who always intended to be!

Sincerely,

LIFE IS LIKE THAT

I have subscribed for LIFE each year since its first number, keeping a fairly complete file, whatever such facts may betoken. I have, naturally enough, often disagreed with its political slants and judgments. It comes natural, too, to praise LIFE without limit for certain features of which "The World We Live In" is outstanding and superb. I have mutilated copies of LIFE, for sake of convenience tearing out precious art reproductions. Once leaving a plane at LaGuardia Field I said to the young woman in the aisle just ahead of me, "Why are you carrying that magazine LIFE around with you?" From her sweet face came the answer in a low voice, "I'm a teacher and my children love it." That was her testimonial about visual education.

personal reply also written in longhand. In his letter he expressed sincere thanks for the courtesy of my note of the 16th. He said he wished to assure me that my invitation caused him no personal embarrassment. His feeling, he said, was that having entered this political campaign, he would become involved in the necessity of making laborious explanations to the public, if he had met with me and the Cabinet. He went on to say that since there was no hint of national emergency in my telegram of invitation and he no longer belonged to any of the public services, he thought it wiser to decline. He closed his letter by assuring me of his support of real bipartisanship in foreign problems.

ON the morning of Nov. 18 Secretary of State Acheson, Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, Secretary of Defense Lovett and Assistant to the President Averell Harriman conferred with me on the various items of business to be taken up with Eisenhower that afternoon.

General Eisenhower arrived at the White House executive offices at 1:55 and was immediately escorted to my office. He was accompanied by Senator Lodge and Mr. Dodge, but I invited the President-elect to meet with me privately before we held a general session with our aides.

Eisenhower was unsmiling. I thought he looked tense. I wanted him to be at his ease. Before getting to the purpose of the conference, I talked to him about some of the paintings hanging in my office, and I pointed to the large and magnificent globe he had used in World War II. Eisenhower gave me this globe at Frankfort, where I saw him during the Potsdam conference. I offered to leave this globe for him in the White House. He accepted. He remained unsmiling. I then got down to business.

I told him I thought it was necessary to have this meeting in the best interests of the country and that I had two important reasons in mind. We needed to reassure other countries that there was some stability about our foreign policy and allay uneasiness during this period of transition. And I said I wanted to make it plain that my offer to cooperate in an orderly transfer of government to his Administration was a genuine offer to do what was best for the country. I had no purpose or intention of setting any political trap or trying to shift any responsibility that was mine as President.

I told him that the Constitution leaves the powers and duties of the presidential office on the outgoing President until the inauguration of his successor. The responsibility would be mine until Jan. 20, and I expected to exercise it.

'What is best for America'

I SAID I understood that any President-elect is naturally and properly reluctant to take on any of the political responsibilities of the office before taking on the legal powers as well. I stated that my Administration did not expect the new Administration to take on responsibility prematurely. There might be some foreign policy issues where we could not succeed unless other nations have assurance of the continuity of our policy under the new Administration. This would be something beyond the power of the present Administration to determine.

I said, "We will tell you about these issues and would welcome concurrence if you want to give it. But we will not press for it. This is a matter on which you will have to make up your own mind on the basis of what is best for America."

I outlined the atomic energy matters which required the President's decision and how the President works with the Special Committee of the National Security Council. I offered to arrange to have the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, Gordon Dean, bring him up to date on the atomic energy program.

Our meeting lasted 20 minutes, and I then escorted the general into the Cabinet room.

I informed the others that I had just had a private conversation with General Eisenhower. At this point the President-elect asked me whether I would give him a memorandum of our conversation. I assured the general I would be glad to do so.

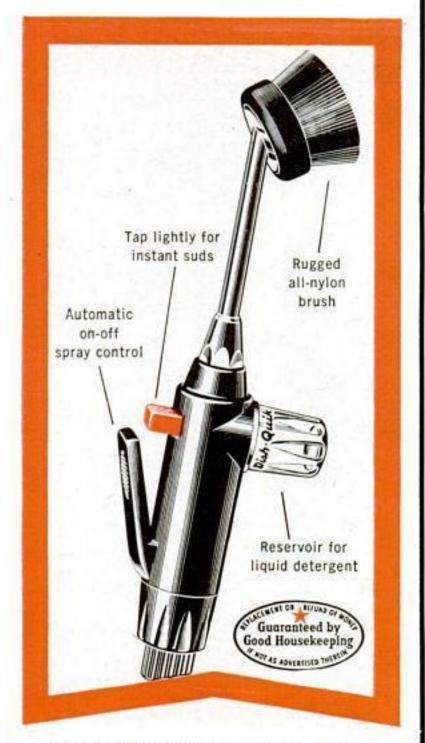

Who cares how much the Governor weighs?

I'm not interested in technical talk about ounces. All I know is that the new weight Governor® is the smartest, most comfortable stretch sock I've ever worn. Sure I'm glad it's made of 100% nylon. But more important is how does it look, how does it wear, how does it feel? Well, let me tell you, the new weight ribbed Governor looks, wears and feels great! The moral of this story? PREPARING FOR TURNOVER to the new administration, Truman confers with Eisenhower at the Nov. 18 White House meeting.

I then handed him a two-page memorandum prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury, John Snyder, outlining certain problems which would have to be dealt with by the incoming Administration.

I then asked Secretary of State Dean Acheson to outline certain matters which required either immediate attention or which General Eisenhower should have actively in mind.

Before Acheson spoke, General Eisenhower asked whether he should take notes or whether he would be given a memorandum on the points to be raised. Acheson agreed to give General Eisenhower a memorandum covering these matters.

To conserve time Acheson dealt with only the most important problems. He told General Eisenhower that he felt it was advisable for him to broaden his liaison with the State Department so that as many as possible of the men on whom General Eisenhower would depend would become familiar with the subjects which would have to be dealt with after Jan. 20.

Acheson then dealt with the United Nations discussions over Korea, particularly as they related to the prisoners of war issue: "Any statement on this matter, supporting the view held by this government, by General Eisenhower, would be of the greatest possible assistance. I have prepared the sort of a statement which might provide this assistance and I am handing it to Senator Lodge."

This is the statement that we suggested that Eisenhower make: "The American people earnestly want peace in Korea. They insist, however, on an honorable armistice. The armistice should be a clean and clear armistice which settles all the military problems and leaves nothing to chance or misconstruction.

"Our prisoners of war in Communist hands must be promptly returned. Communist prisoners of war in our hands should be allowed to go home. But it is clear to me that those who violently resist return to the Communists cannot be driven back. They cannot be held in indefinite captivity. They must be released as free men.

"I hope that the General Assembly of the United Nations will take a firm stand on these matters."*

No immediate response from General Eisenhower was asked on this proposed statement. But General Eisenhower said that he was seeing British Foreign Secretary Eden on Thursday and would discuss the question of Korea with him.

Acheson then dealt with the situation in Iran which had developed to a critical point. This was the dispute between Iran and the United Kingdom over oil. Acheson told of some of the latest complications between France and Germany in connection with NATO, which, of course, was familiar ground to General Eisenhower.

* General Eisenhower issued no statement before leaving for Korea but on his return in December he generally reaffirmed the U.S. insistence on an "honorable peace." When he became President he specifically endorsed the principle of voluntary repatriation of PWs.—ED.

When Acheson concluded his presentation, General Eisenhower said that he would like a memorandum of what the Secretary of State had said. He would give it careful study, as well as the suggested statement on Korea.

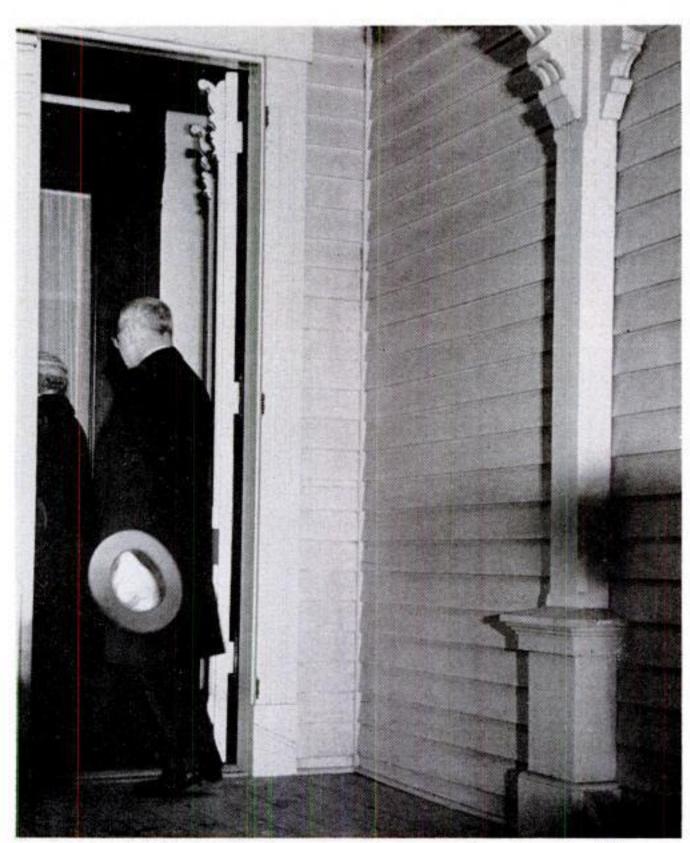

General Eisenhower said that he recognized the seriousness and critical nature of the matters discussed. He then said that he was preparing immediately on the conclusion of this meeting to go with Secretary Lovett to meet the Joint Chiefs of Staff for a military briefing.

General Eisenhower and I then went over a draft of a joint statement which I had had prepared at the White House. It was adopted after two changes requested by the general.

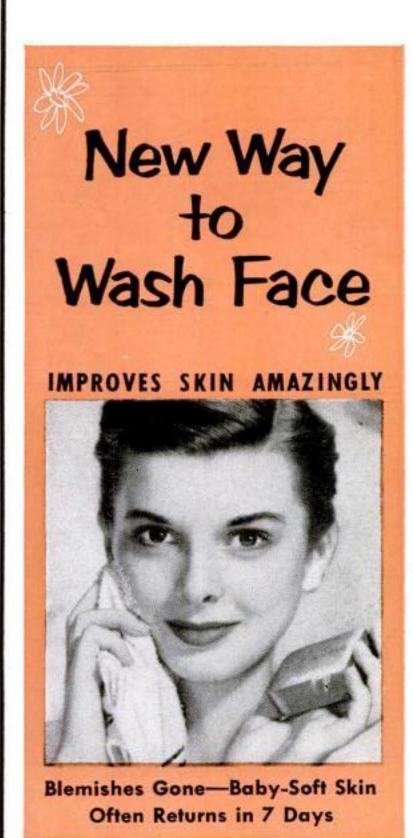

When the general and his aides left, I was troubled. I had the feeling that up to this meeting in the White House, General Eisenhower had not grasped the immense job ahead of him.

Doubleday and Co. will publish the full text of Volume II, "Years of Trial and Hope" ($5), on March 5. This and Volume I, "Year of Decisions," which was excerpted by LIFE last year, will be a March selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club.

There was something about his attitude during the meeting that I did not understand. It may have been that this meeting made him realize for the first time what the presidency and the responsibilities of the President were. He may have been awe-struck by the long array of problems and decisions the President has to face. If that is so then I can almost understand his frozen grimness throughout the meeting. But it may have been something else. He may have failed to grasp the true picture of what the Administration had been doing because in the heat of partisan politics he had gotten a badly distorted version of the true facts. Whatever it was, I kept thinking about it.

The "Valley" earns its name at sea, where the skipper finds ways of pleasing the crew, and ashore, where he can be equally obliging. When her gobs suggested a liberty in New York, the

MISCELLANY

WATCHED POTS WATCHING

As anyone who has ever struggled with housekeeping knows, inanimate household objects have a way of assuming perverse personalities. Cups and glasses hurl themselves from cabinets in an ecstasy of self-destruction, skillets spit hot grease at the hands that feed them, cans, jars and bottles decline to be opened and shelves reach down to clout heads.

Busy in her kitchen one recent day, Mrs. Clarence L. Bonds, a Dallas, Texas housewife, was startled to notice that two pots seemed to be staring at her. To complete the illusion created by reflections of the burners on the gas range, she placed a pencil and bottle cap before each utensil, then had her son take a picture of pots cooking up mischief.

2 " 'You'll do better next time,' Chief Howard Skye promised, and he helped a tribesman smooth the slick course for a contest. I felt ready. So did the Indians. 'Hun Yu!' they whooped as they launched their waxed snakes down the curvy track.

5 "You aim for distance when you toss a snow snake. My own favorite distance champ is Canadian Club. No matter how far I travel, I always find it waiting for me."

Why this whisky's worldwide popularity? Canadian Club is light as scotch, rich as rye, satisfying as bourbon.

3 "I was low man on the totem pole with my 893-yard toss, but how could a paleface be expected to do any better? Waxing the snakes to suit varying snow conditions is the real trick, the Indians explained. Each brave had his own secret wax, often handed down from father to son through the centuries.

Yet it has a distinctive flavor and a character that is all its own. You can stay with Canadian Club all evening long . . . in cocktails before dinner and tall ones afterward. There is one and only one Canadian Club, and no other whisky tastes quite like it in all the world.
